Mr. MILLS. I take it all back then. I thought you did. [Laughter.] There are so many here who did as I have accused my friend from Indiana of doing that I must be pardoned for my mistake in his case. One hundred and twenty-six went through the tellers and voted to maintain the dignity and the rights of the House of Representatives, but when the yeas and nays came to be taken that vote dwindled down to 55 for and 185 against. [Laughter and applause.] I came to this House twelve years ago, and by the grace of God two years after I came here the Democratic party came into power in this House and at once commenced to cut down the salaries of officers. It commenced to reduce the expenditures of the Government. We began upon the line of economy, but at the other end of the Capitol that body which represents nothing, is responsible to nobody, refused to accede to the reductions we then made, but on the contrary established a distinction between their officials and the employés of this House by insisting that their employés should receive higher pay than ours. The House then agreed to it and still continues to agree to it. Two years ago they came in with a provision to allow each Senator to have a clerk at $6 a day or $180 a month. How did this House of Representatives, representing the horny-handed Democracy of the country, behave? We said we would not agree to give them these clerks, but the Senate insisted and we knelt down in submission and gave it to them out of the public Treasury of the United States. They claimed it as their right and they have ever since received it. To-day they propose to put you away to the rear during the ceremonies of inaugurating the Chief Magistrate of the country, and yet one hundred and eighty-five representatives of the people of the United States said that was the proper position for us to occupy. It is against all this I enter my solemn protest.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. I am also permitted to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. My amendment is in the form of a motion to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out amendment numbered 29 and insert "for clerks to Senators and Representatives who are not chairmen of committees, at the rate of $100 per month during the session, $200,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that amendment germane?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. It is offered as a substitute for the Senate amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. It is to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it is subject to the point of order as any other question coming before the House, that is to say, it involves an expenditure of money, and is subject to consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the point of order, and will be glad to hear the gentleman from Ohio upon it.

The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that under the rules of the House the proposed amendment must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union because it proposes to increase expenditures.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to be heard on that.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the further point of order that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. KEIFER. That has nothing to do with it now, for we are considering the proposition of the Senate, which is subject to amendment in the House.

I submit the other point is made too late for the purpose of having this amendment of the Senate go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and for the reason that we have entered upon the consideration of it in the House. It has been debated and we are proceeding with its consideration in the House; and, therefore, it is too late now to make the point of order as against that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is not made against the Senate amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. But my amendment comes in in consequence of the fact that we are considering the Senate amendment in the House against which no point of order was made. Having this Senate amendment before us in the House by failing to make the point of order against it, we are considering it in the House subject to be amended in such way as our rules prescribe; and when an amendment to a Senate amendment is offered it is too late then, of course, to make the point of order that the Senate amendment must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Under Rule XX Senate amendments which would be liable to the point of order if originating in the House may be sent to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the point of order, but it must be the original proposition as it came from the Senate.

I am not able to give exactly the language of Rule XX; but that rule, the language of it, applies to the Senate amendment, and the point of order was not made against the Senate amendment. I submit, then, that it is proper under our rules to offer to a Senate amendment another amendment which is proper to be offered or which is germane to the subject-matter of such an amendment when acting on it in the House as we are here.

The SPEAKER. The question was presented at the last session of Congress and the Chair made a ruling upon it then, but has never been entirely satisfied that it was altogether correct. The Chair will cause the Journal entry to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House then proceeded as the regular order of business (as a privileged question) to the consideration of the bill of the House (H. R. 5459) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes, and amendments of the Senate thereto, pending when the House took a recess on yesterday; the pending question being on the following amendment of the Senate, namely: "Page 74, after line 27, insert: 'For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, one hundred and eighty-five.' Pending which Mr. HONK moved that the House recede from its disagreement to the said amendment, and agree to the same with the following amendment:

"Strike out the words 'one hundred and eighty-five' and insert in lieu thereof 'two hundred and fifty.'"

Pending which Mr. HOLMAN made the point of order that the said amendment under clause 3 of Rule XXI was not in order, for the reason that said appropriation was for a purpose not authorized or specified by law or for work already in progress.

The Speaker overruled the said point of order on the ground that the proposition to which the amendment was offered was properly before the House and was amendable, without regard to the rule applicable to an original amendment proposed in the House.

The SPEAKER. It will be observed that the question presented in that case was on an amendment which proposed simply to increase the amount appropriated by the Senate amendment for the same purpose provided for in the Senate amendment. The gentleman from Ohio now submits a proposition which is to make an appropriation for a different purpose from that provided for in the Senate amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But it is a legitimate amendment to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is germane. But that is not the question. The question is whether it is competent under the rule of the House, which the Chair will cause to be read, to propose an amendment in the House to a Senate amendment which provides for an appropriation for a different purpose from that provided for by the Senate amendment unless it shall have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I would like after the rule is read to be permitted to say something on this point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then hear the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. I suggest to the Chair that this comes within clause 3 of Rule XXI. It changes existing law.

Mr. KEIFER. That has nothing to do with it now.

The Clerk read clause 3 of Rule XXIII, as follows:

3. All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let me suggest to the Chair that the gist of that rule, so far as it applies to the present question, is to be found in the last two lines:

And a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

This evidently refers to a bill which is before the House; and any proposition in such a bill subject to the points of order would carry the bill with it.

We found before the adoption of the twentieth rule that when the Senate made such an amendment it did not become subject to the point of order. We therefore made a further amendment in Rule XX, which declared that any proposition originating in the Senate in the form of an amendment to a House bill should go to the Committee of the Whole upon a point of order, provided it would have been subject to that point had it first come up in the House. Now, then, the House had the option of sending this matter to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Not this matter, because this comes up now on a conference report.

Mr. KEIFER. I suggest to the Chair that this is not on a conference report. It is an amendment disagreed to by the House and on which the conferees have not agreed.

The SPEAKER. It comes before the House by reason of the presentation of a conference report; otherwise it would not be before the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But the point of order was never made and that amendment was never sent to the Committee of the Whole.

Now, it must be certainly in order for the House to amend the proposition of the Senate. We can not be cut off from a due consideration and amendment of a proposition originating in the Senate by a rule which refers only to the consideration of a bill of the House originating in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask him whether the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] does not change existing law?

Mr. KEIFER. That does not affect it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That does not affect it in any way. That is in another section of another rule.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. REED, of Maine. What the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to is the third clause of Rule XXI. We are talking now about the third clause of Rule XXIII. That clause refers to a bill originating in the House and can not be made to apply to an amendment which originates in the Senate. That would clog the free action of the House which ought to have the power to amend any proposition of the Senate before agreeing to it. And the proposition as to the free right of the House to agree to an amendment of the Senate with an amendment, I submit to the Chair, becomes much stronger at this last stage than ever before; and unless there be some positive rule requiring it we should not be hampered by the suggestion that we should go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the Chair allow me to make a suggestion which I think has not yet been made? This clause of the bill has been considered in the House, and the point of order was not made against it that it had first to be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and it is probable it could never be made against it after we had passed upon it once in the House. When these amendments came up first after the return of the bill from the Senate, this amendment, like all other Senate amendments to this bill, was considered in the House and was disagreed to. Then was the time, I maintain, if ever, for the point to be made that the amendment should have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so, too, but this proposition was not then before the House at all. This proposition now comes before the House for the first time.

Mr. KEIFER. Then if the original Senate amendment, to which my motion relates, could not be sent to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union either under Rule XX or under paragraph 3 of the rule which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has just read, it would be impossible to consider it anywhere else. My proposition is one that must go with the Senate amendment, and can not be considered anywhere else. If it is germane to that amendment (and that is conceded), then it can only be considered because we are considering the Senate amendment, and under our rule we may concur in a Senate amendment with an amendment.

My proposition could not be sent to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union unless the original Senate amendment could be sent there. I agree that if we were considering Senate amendments on a bill when they first come here, and we reached one of this character, any gentleman might make the point of order that that amendment must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and the Chair would hold, as it has held, and as it did hold on the Mexican war pension bill, that certain amendments should go for consideration to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; but we have passed that stage with this Senate amendment and are now in the House considering it, and while it is true that we are considering it because a conference report is brought in here, that report does not include this at all, but simply disagrees to it and leaves the House to consider whether or not it will agree to the amendment or concur in the disagreement of the conferees. My amendment is here because the original proposition is here, and that is all there is of it.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word as to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. It is not denied that the proposition which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] has introduced changes existing law. I maintain that, this being a general appropriation bill, the gentleman's proposition is subject to the point of order provided for in the twenty-first rule, whether in Committee of the Whole or in the House. And further, I submit, to strengthen that position, that this is an original proposition, upon which that rule could not be made to operate at all except when it is introduced and known to the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then why did the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] cause to be enacted Rule XX? Because if his argument amounts to anything it must cover amendments that came from the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. That rule relates to a case where the Senate provides for an object different from that contained in the bill as it passed from the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am surprised to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] contend that the third section of Rule XXI has anything to do with this matter.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is, in my judgment, a valid point of order and ought to be ruled upon.

The SPEAKER. The question of order is made against this amendment upon two grounds: first, that being an original proposition here in the House to appropriate a certain sum of money for a certain purpose, it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and secondly, that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures. The Chair has caused to be read a decision made at the last session, in which it was held that a proposition made upon the floor of the House, when a Senate amendment was under consideration, to increase the amount proposed to be appropriated by the Senate for the same purpose for which the appropriation was proposed by the Senate need not necessarily have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; but this, as the Chair has remarked before, is a different proposition from that.

This amendment proposes not simply to increase—not at all to increase, so far as the Chair sees—the amount which the Senate proposes to appropriate as compensation for its own clerks, but to add the clerks of the House, and thereby make an appropriation of something over $200,000 for another purpose than that provided for in the Senate amendment. Now the rule of the House is that every proposition involving a tax or charge upon the people, all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Of a bill?

The SPEAKER. Of a bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Has actually commenced?

The SPEAKER. But the rule includes all propositions or proceedings touching the appropriation of money. Of course the amount involved does not affect the principle or the construction of the rule, but the Chair may be permitted to allude to that for the purpose of illustrating the importance of the rule. If it is in order to add to a Senate amendment, for a different purpose than that to which the amendment relates, the sum of $100, without first considering the proposition in Committee of the Whole, it is equally in order to add $10,000,000, and if the Chair were to hold that such an amendment as that could be considered in the House without having its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole, clearly the spirit of the rule would be violated. The Chair thinks that, this being an original proposition in the House and for a purpose not provided for in the Senate amendment, it must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Upon the other question, the Chair held during the last session that when a Senate amendment providing for an appropriation not authorized by existing law came to the House, it was in order for the House to amend it by adding other appropriations relevant to it, although not authorized by existing law, because otherwise the House would have no power to amend a Senate amendment which proposed to appropriate money for purposes not previously authorized by law. But upon the first ground the Chair thinks this amendment is not in order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is it in order to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair prefers to hear gentlemen on that question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does the Chair decide it not in order because it must first be considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. Not in order to be offered in the House and considered in the House. If the Chair entertains it as pending in the House he supposes he must put the question upon it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But the Chair will see that his ruling requires foresight on the part of members as to what amendments are going to be offered; and the amendment of the Senate must be sent to the Committee of the Whole upon the strength of amendments which it is proposed subsequently to offer. The Chair can not desire to come to that conclusion. This rule must be construed all together; and the concluding language is:

And a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has been commenced.

Now we have commenced the consideration; and I submit that the point of order is not good under the rule. True, the first clauses of the rule are general—

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people, &c., shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole.

But that is limited by the subsequent language of the rule:

And a point of order made under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

If it is good before that time the implication of the rule must be that it is not good after that time; and we have entered upon the consideration of this matter.

The Chair will see at once by the condition to which his construction would reduce the House that such can not possibly be the intention of the rule, for the Chair has to rule out this amendment as not being in order because offered in the House.

The SPEAKER. Certainly, because, as the Chair has already said, if the point of order had been made against the Senate amendment when it was presented to the House it would necessarily have had its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and then this amendment could have been offered and considered. But that point of order was not made. The House determined not to consider this Senate amendment in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but to consider it in the House; and this is an amendment which the Chair thinks can not be considered in the House without being first considered in the committee.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then how would the Chair construe this last part of the rule—because our sole purpose is to arrive at some reasonable construction—

The SPEAKER. Certainly; that is the only purpose of the Chair.

Mr. REED, of Maine. How would the Chair construe this last part of the rule:

And a point of order made under this rule shall be good at any time before consideration of a bill has commenced.

Does not that imply that the point of order shall not be good after consideration has commenced?

The SPEAKER. But there was a time when a mere point of order would have taken this amendment to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and gentlemen who desired to offer amendments increasing the appropriation or making appropriations for other purposes had a right to take it there for that purpose and offer their amendments. But that was not done; that point of order was not made; and the Senate amendment is now before the House for consideration in the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But not for amendment.

The SPEAKER. For proper amendments—for amendments which are in order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is there anything in the rule which says we shall not offer an amendment of this sort?

The SPEAKER. There is a rule which says that a proposition of this kind shall have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But that rule also says:

And a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

Meaning it shall not be good afterward.

The SPEAKER. But the House is not considering a bill; it is considering a Senate amendment. That is the original proposition.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If the House is not considering a bill, then the third clause of Rule XXIII is not applicable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that clause of the rule relates to any resolution, proposition, or proceeding.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But the language of the rule refers entirely to a bill, and the Chair must see that—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read it again:

All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money—

Mr. REED, of Maine. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER (reading)— or bills making appropriations of money or property—

Mr. REED, of Maine. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER—

or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payment out of appropriations already made.

Now, "all proceedings touching appropriations of money" are as much embraced by the rule as what is technically called a bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But then comes the rest of the rule:

And a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

Now, I submit to the Chair that this rule never contemplated the present situation; that this was an omitted case, just as that which was remedied by Rule XX was an omitted case; and the Senate having made an amendment, and no point of order having been made upon it in the House, which would have carried it to the Committee of the Whole, it became open for amendment. Now, the amendment of an appropriation bill naturally involves either the increase of an appropriation or the decrease of it or a change of its character; and the House can not have free way on such a matter unless it has the right to amend it not only by increasing the amount which the Chair has already decided is proper, but by varying the object for which the appropriation was made.

The Chair makes a distinction which I think on reflection he will see is not sound. That is, that there is a difference between changing the amount and changing the nature of the object for which the amount is appropriated. Provided it is germane it is just as proper to change the object as it is to change the amount, and the Chair already having ruled on a previous occasion, and properly I think, the amount can be changed, surely it follows logically the object also may be changed. And I think the difficulty which has arisen in this case has arisen from laying too much stress on the earlier words of the rule and not bearing in mind the fact that the rule must be construed all together.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman's construction of the rule in this particular is correct, then the Chair made a great mistake in deciding the amendments to what is known as the Mexican pension bill must have their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, because the point of order was not made before the consideration of the bill was commenced, but was made on each amendment as it was reached.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That came under Rule XX, which provides any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. The Chair was exactly right as to the amendments to the Mexican pension bill, because they came under another rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has great difficulty in determining whether—

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is an important point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has great difficulty in determining whether it is his duty to decide an amendment out of order and exclude it from the consideration of the House because it ought first to be considered in committee, or whether it is the duty of the Chair to rule simply that it must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and allow it to be offered, with the right to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering it. That is a question, so far as the Chair knows, which has never been presented or discussed in the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Perhaps we might go on with the other amendments.

Mr. KEIFER. That is all there is of it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know when it will be in order to move that this House adjourn. [Cries of "No!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair has only one object in view, and that is to give a construction to this rule that will be in accordance with its spirit and not establish a precedent which the House may desire to escape from hereafter. It is an entirely new question, so far as the Chair knows, whether the fact that the proposition must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union absolutely excludes its presentation in the House, or whether the simple effect of it is to allow it to be presented, if germane and unobjectionable in other respects, and then have its consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. If the gentleman from Indiana knows of any ruling the Chair will be glad to have his attention called to it?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that in reference to the particular letter of Rule XX it is clear, considering the purpose of the rule and its spirit, that it would be impossible with any safety to the deliberations of the House to adopt any other construction than that adopted by the Chair. I submit that after this discussion we should dispose of this amendment to the Senate amendment. I trust my friend from Illinois will allow me to call the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. I have promised to yield to the gentleman from Kansas. I will then allow the gentleman to take the floor for the purpose of demanding the previous question. All I wish to do is to dispose of the amendment.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman does not have the floor to submit that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think, after as careful examination of this rule as he is able to make under the circumstances, that to hold that the amendment could not be entertained might result in preventing the House from making very necessary amendments to Senate amendments, and that the Chair ought therefore to allow an amendment to the amendment to be entertained and have its consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair makes that ruling because great inconvenience and injustice might result to the House itself from any other construction of the rule.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope the gentleman will not make any objection to granting unanimous consent to consider it in committee.

A. MEMBER. Consider it in the House as in committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is still in order to make the point that the amendment is not germane to the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. That has been substantially decided.

Mr. SPRINGER. This has not been made as yet, however; it may have been referred to casually in the statement of the Chair. I desire to call attention to the fact that it is not germane to the pending proposition, for the reason that it is a distinct, additional, substantive proposition. The fact that if a proposition before us which allows clerks to Senators is not to be amended as matter germane to it by giving clerks to the House of Representatives, no more than it would be germane to give additional clerks to the President or to the legation at Paris or to any department here. Simply because clerks are provided here for Senators that does not make it germane to give clerks to any other department of the Government.

Mr. KEIFER. We can not hear the gentleman from Illinois here, but I supposed I was entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is germane. It relates to the subject of clerks for members of Congress. The fact that the Senate amendment provides simply for clerks to members of the Senate does not preclude the right of the House to so amend as to pay clerks of members of the House. Suppose, for instance, the question was as to the compensation of the clerks of the Senate committees or the officers of the Senate, might it not be amended by adding the clerks or officers of the House? The Chair thinks it could. If you take it in the narrowest sense of course it relates only to the subject of clerks to the individual Senators; but the Chair thinks that would be an exceedingly narrow construction to put upon it and one not warranted by the rule.

Mr. BLAND. I understand that this is now being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objected.

Mr. KEIFER. I understood he withdrew the objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; I think the House does not intend to increase our own salaries; that is practically the effect of this proposition, if adopted. It amounts substantially to that.

Mr. BLAND. How, then, can we consider it?

The SPEAKER. By going into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEIFER. If we have a little order in the House I think we can get through this without any difficulty. I want to avoid making the motion if I can that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I am willing, if unanimous consent can be given to consider this in the House as in Committee of the Whole, to limit the time for debate as much as the gentleman desires.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. One minute, then.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that it is not in order to move at this time that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That can only be done under a suspension of the rules, and the House is not now in a condition where that motion to suspend the rules can be made. We can not go into the committee without a suspension of the rules, and that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. On what ground?

Mr. SPRINGER. Because another proposition is pending.

The SPEAKER. Another proposition was pending when this conference report came in; but this is a privileged report and has suspended the consideration of this subject.

Mr. SPRINGER. The conference report did that; but here is another proposition that was not embraced in the conference report.

The SPEAKER. But the House is actually considering it.

Mr. SPRINGER. But not in Committee of the Whole. It would not, of course, be in order to refer the conference report to the Committee of the Whole or to lay it on the table. Mr. Blaine held that to be the construction of the rule. He held that the House must act upon it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is aware of the fact that the House has disposed of the report of the conference committee by adopting it, and the matter before us now is not the report of the conference committee, but a particular Senate amendment which the gentleman moves to concur in with an amendment. The subject, however, was brought before the House by the conference report.

Mr. RANDALL. But if the question goes to the conference committee it takes the whole subject.

The SPEAKER. It takes the proposition before the House of course.

Mr. SPRINGER. But this bill came from the conference committee. It is the report of that committee, and we are now considering a part of the conference report; and if you can refer this portion of the conference report to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, you can dispose of all conference reports by referring them to the committees of the House, which would be a means of defeating all legislation.

The SPEAKER. It does not refer the conference report which has been disposed of by the House. It only refers a particular amendment on which the point of order is made.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the conference report is this bill.

The SPEAKER. The conference report is upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, or rather on the amendments of the Senate to the House bill. The conference report does not relate to any part of the bill to which the two Houses agree; and hence no part of the bill would go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union excepting such amendment as the point of order may lie against. It has all been disposed of but the one single question which is now before the House for consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. But if we go into Committee of the Whole, then where would it be?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole. He states that he will agree to such limitation upon debate as the gentleman from Indiana will suggest.

Mr. RANDALL. That is objected to.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to reserve the point of order that this changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

The SPEAKER. That point of order has been disposed of. The Senate amendment changes existing law also.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I regret to seem to stand in opposition to the general sentiment of the House, but gentlemen will see exactly the position in which the conference committee would be placed if they themselves consented voluntarily that this amendment should be submitted.

Mr. KEIFER. But the conference committee would not be responsible for what we may decide.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman will not misapprehend what interpretation would be fixed upon our action in that respect if the members of the conference committee consent that such proposition shall go before the House.

Mr. KEIFER. Then we can go into Committee of the Whole House, and I shall have to make that motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I greatly prefer voting for an increase of our salaries directly than to vote for the increase in this indirect way, for that is simply what it amounts to, and for one I can not consent to that.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman will see the time in the remaining part of this session, short as it is, as he did in the last, when we will agree to pay certain clerks $180 a month, at the same time refusing to pay them $100 a month in connection with paying clerks for members of the House $100 a month.

Mr. HOLMAN. The conferees on the part of the House recommend to the House to insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate. What more could they do? They have done that. And if now they voluntarily consent by their own act that that provision shall be enlarged from $39,000 to over $200,000 in what position does that place them? It is a position which I for one can not consent to occupy.

Mr. KEIFER. Is the gentleman from Indiana not in error when he says the conferees on the part of the House recommend the House to insist on its disagreement? Do not they say only they disagreed with the conference on the part of the Senate as to that amendment? They do not say anything on the subject of what the House should do.

Mr. HOLMAN. What more could we do than disagree?

Mr. KEIFER. One of the conferees on the part of the House has already moved that the House shall recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I speak of the act of the majority of the conferees. Mr. McMILLIN. I beg the gentleman to remember that one man does not constitute a majority of the conferees. A majority favor non-concurrence, and they should be sustained by the House.

Mr. KEIFER. In order to have this proposition considered I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MORSE. I understood the Chair to rule that that required unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made no ruling upon that subject.

Mr. MORSE. Then I object; and we will have a ruling.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule when the point is made. Under the rules of the House it is not in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union till after the morning hour has been occupied or dispensed with, and neither has been done to-day.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then we will have to stop with the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. I think paragraph 9 of Rule XVI applies to this motion.

The SPEAKER. Clause 9 of Rule XVI provides that—

At any time after the expiration of the morning hour it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue or general appropriation bills.

Mr. KEIFER. Under the circumstances and with very great regret I shall be obliged to withdraw this proposition.

Several MEMBERS. Why withdraw it?

Mr. KEIFER. There is a variety of opinion as to whether this should be insisted upon. We cannot finish this bill to-night perhaps if we insist upon this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can insist upon it in the conference.

Mr. KEIFER. I will be entirely candid and will say I am afraid of the conferees on the part of the House, although I know the Speaker will appoint very excellent men. I wish it were possible to instruct the conferees to agree to such a proposition as this before agreeing to provide for the payment of Senators' clerks at $180 per month.

Now, as I have a few minutes of time yielded to me by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I will at least state what will be the effect of such an amendment. The proposition if it were adopted would cut down the pay that is proposed to be given to Senate clerks from $6 a day, or $180 a month, to $100 a month, and it would give to each Representative not a chairman of a committee a clerk during the session, paying him at the rate of $100 a month. There would be some economy in the matter of paying the Senate clerks, and we would not pay a large price to the clerks of the members of the House.

In a long session, the average of which is seven months, it would be $700 for the clerk; in the short session about $300; in an entire Congress $1,000 would be paid to the clerk of each Representative and each Senator, except the clerk that was appointed by the chairman of a committee either of the Senate or of the House; and that clerk would be left to receive the same pay as he now receives, $6 a day, and he ought to have the difference. He, as the clerk to the committee, has the committee work to do, and presumably a good deal of work for the chairman of the committee.

Allow me to say, as I am about to take my leave of the Congress of the United States, that the people of this country would gladly give clerks to members, and be willing they should be paid out of the United States Treasury if they knew how much better a Representative a member would be if he had a clerk. I venture to state here in this presence that there is no member of this House who does not occupy more than four-fifths of all his valuable time in looking after matters that are entirely and wholly disconnected with his legislative duties, and while he is doing that he is cut off from the necessary work that he should do in following legislation, in studying the subjects of legislation, in good reading, in close investigation; he is cut off from that and he is tired and wearied out writing letters and going for this thing and for that for his constituents. All that may be proper enough in itself, but it results in this, that he is so weary and tired that he is unable to discharge his duties here upon the floor or in committee.

I know that members of this House of Representatives who do much work on the floor and in committee are men who fail in a large sense to please their constituents at home. And why? They do not write enough letters; they do not run enough errands; they do not devote their time sufficiently to attend to little things for their constituents, but are devoting their time to the things they came here to attend to.

I take it that no person will be offended when I say that practically nineteen Representatives on the floor of this House out of every twenty are utterly disqualified by reason of this for properly discharging their legislative duties. Now, it is a very proper thing to attend to the correspondence connected with the Pension Office. It is a matter of sentiment with us, and we all do it, or try to do it. It is a very proper thing to do, and so are a multitude of other things that we have to do in connection with the Land Office and the Indian Office and the other public offices. All these things we could do if each member had a clerk recognized as the clerk of a particular member. The clerk could attend to the correspondence; he would be received by the heads of Departments and the heads of the different bureaus; he would have the entrées anywhere he chose to go on this business, and he could attend to these matters as well as the member, and the member might be devoting himself to study, to investigation, to the duties that belong to him as a Representative here.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLIN. Do not the members know the duties that they assume when they seek the votes of their constituents?

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, yes.

Mr. McMILLIN. And do they not accept the office with that knowledge?

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, yes; they know the burdens, and when they get here—I say it without intending to give offense to anybody—they fail to do the things they ought to do, and do first those other things which their constituents, as individuals, require them to do, but which are no proper part of the duties of a Representative in Congress. I know this. I am perfectly well aware of it. We are all guilty of that. A man will tramp about this city from Department to Department all the morning and he will hasten away from his seat during the sessions of the House; he will grow tired and weary, and the day will pass by, and he will give no sort of attention to the legislation of Congress. He does this because he feels that if he does not write to "John Smith" promptly and get his little matter through some Department he will make an enemy at home.

We ought to be above it. But if we are to do these things, if we are required to do them, let us have this aid. I say "us," although I am not included for the future. If this amendment should be agreed to in the conference committee it would not affect me; it would go into effect in the Forty-ninth Congress. I am speaking, therefore, as one having no sort of interest in this proposition except the great interest which we all have that Representatives in the Congress of the United States shall be placed in that position with relation to their constituents that they can discharge their proper duties here.

If this provision were adopted legislation would go on more rapidly and it would be better done, for each member each day could know that he was free to set about his legislative duties and not to have his time taken up in answering letters and running errands. Mr. Speaker, this is no new trouble, nor did it originate in America. Edmund Burke, when taken to task on a certain occasion for not coming to visit his constituents for a long period of time, responded and said, "While I have not been among you, I have run my very legs off in London doing your errands." We are running our legs off doing errands, and while we are doing that we are not doing the duties we are sent here to do.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. CANNON, to concur in the Senate amendment; and there were—ayes 34, noes 59.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and ask a further conference.

Mr. HISCOCK. May I inquire of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] if he expects the Senate will yield?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not able to tell.

Mr. HISCOCK. Have you the slightest idea that the Senate will yield?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no other information than the gentleman from New York has himself, but I trust that the Senate will see the propriety of yielding this point.

Mr. HISCOCK. You have been in conference with the Senate and must have formed an opinion.

Mr. HOLMAN. As far as I am concerned as one member of the House I do not propose that this amendment of the Senate shall be adopted. I propose to do all I can to prevent it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I simply want to know what we have before us, even if it goes to the extent of an extra session.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; I will stand up for an extra session rather than agree to this amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to call attention to the fact that last session at 10 o'clock in the evening we voted against giving the Senate an extra $30,000, because, although nothing was said about it, it was understood that the money was for clerks, and at 4 o'clock next morning the House voted for the Senate proposition pure and simple. I mention this merely as an interesting historical fact.

Mr. CANNON. And Mr. Speaker, I want to say that, in my opinion, this House, inside of twenty-four hours, will do exactly what it has now refused to do.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But we must save our money now for public buildings.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I want to add that I voted steadily against the proposition, both at 10 o'clock and at 4 o'clock.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is time enough to cross that stream when we come to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say a single word before submitting the motion for the previous question. If the House proposes to have a further conference on this proposition, I must protest that gentlemen here, especially my colleague on the committee [Mr. CANNON], who it is to be presumed will be one of the managers on the part of the House in the further conference, should not notify the Senate that within twenty-four hours the House will recede from its disagreement. I do not think my friend is justified in indulging in that prediction. Such a result may take place; but I do not propose for one to advertise the other House that the present action upon our part is not a bona fide and honest expression of the conviction of the House that the Senate ought not to increase the salaries of Senators, especially in this indirect way.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is no more opposed to Senators having these clerks than I am.

Mr. HOLMAN. So I understand.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to add that if, perchance, I am to be one of the managers on the part of the House in the further conference upon this bill, it may be that I was guilty of an indiscretion in making the remark that I did. But I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana, who is an older member than I am, to the fact that I did but follow in his wake when he, who will also probably be one of the conferees, announced that he never had assented and never would assent to this proposition, and would do all he could to defeat it.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Is it true that under this provision thirty-one Senators who are not chairmen of committees will be entitled to clerks?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. And that the salary of each clerk at $180 a month for a long session of seven months will be $1,260?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Now I would like to know what difference there is between passing an amendment in this guise and voting to each of these United States Senators $1,260 extra compensation from the United States Treasury. As a rule Senators are able to hire clerks from their own private means; while Members of the House of Representatives, who spend their time and money in the service of their constituents, working night and day, depriving themselves of social comfort with their families, are asked to vote Senators this extra compensation.

I hope that the conferees on the part of the House will hold out until 12 o'clock on the 4th of March in their resistance to this demand, and if necessary will allow an extra session to come rather than agree to this amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the motion of Mr. HOLMAN that the House further insist on its disagreement to the twenty-ninth amendment of the Senate and ask a further conference was agreed to; and the Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. HANCOCK, and Mr. CANNON as conferees on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] make as to the other amendment—the amendment numbered 1?

Mr. HOLMAN. As to that amendment, which is formal, I make the same motion—that the House further insist on its disagreement and ask a further conference.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made. There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6658) to provide for the sale of the Sac and Fox and Iowa Indian reservations in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes.

CATTLE TRAFFIC IN THE WEST.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report from the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics in response of the resolution of the House calling for information in regard to the ranch and range cattle traffic in the Western States and Territories; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to inquire whether it is now in order to proceed with the consideration of the election case? If so, I hope we shall go on with it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to take a recess.

Mr. SPRINGER. That was certainly superseded by all these intervening matters.

The SPEAKER. Under what rule?

Mr. SPRINGER. Unanimous consent was given—

The SPEAKER. It required no unanimous consent. The conference report was a privileged matter, and simply suspended the proceedings which were going on—did not terminate them.

Mr. VALENTINE. The first question is upon the motion for a recess till 8 o'clock.

A MEMBER. Make it 9.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN.] The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee proposes a recess till 8 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. VALENTINE. I understand there is a desire on the part of members on both sides that we now take a recess until 9 o'clock. If that be the general desire, I suggest that the amendment fixing 8 o'clock be withdrawn, so that we may vote at once on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] proposing 9 o'clock.

Mr. SPRINGER. I propose to stay here till the House settles this question of the right of a member to his seat; and I ask every man who desires the question shall be settled to stay here until it has been settled. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

A MEMBER. What is the question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] moved that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock—

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that will not prevail.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] moved to amend by fixing 9 o'clock, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] moved a further amendment to fix 8 o'clock. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, it is desirable that we should sit here until we receive from the Senate the sundry civil appropriation bill, so we may take action upon the amendments of the Senate, and if the action of the House requires it, that the disagreements of the two Houses may be sent to a conference committee, and the managers of said conference appointed on the part of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is right; and while we are waiting I insist we shall proceed with the discussion of the question of the right of a member to his seat upon this floor.

Mr. VALENTINE. Would it not be in order, Mr. Speaker, for the House now to designate the conferees who shall act on the sundry civil bill when it comes over from the Senate?

Mr. RANDALL. The House must concur or non-concur in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. VALENTINE. It seems to me by unanimous consent we can non-concur and order the appointment of the conferees on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The House can not act on a matter that is not before it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will give to the House such information as he may possess as to the probability of the sundry civil bill being reported during the night.

Mr. RANDALL. It may be 2 o'clock or it may be 3.

Mr. VALENTINE. It may be daylight or 5 or 6 o'clock in the morning; and what is the use of our staying here during all these long hours and tiring ourselves out when we have so much work to do to-morrow and to-morrow night?

Mr. HERR. The Senate are debating the question yet.

Mr. RANDALL. It ought to come here to-night, and the conferees ought to be able to sit as early as 7 o'clock in the morning.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair may be allowed to state, he was informed that the Senate will pass the bill before it takes a recess or adjourns.

Mr. RANDALL. My information comes from what I believe is an authentic source that the Senate will probably finish the bill by 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] that the House shall take a recess until 8 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. BLAND. I ask by unanimous consent that we take a recess until half past 1 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. That is objected to by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. We must keep the members of the House here if we are to have any business done before 2 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. BLAND. There is no quorum here now, and by taking the recess I suggest it will save the clerks, who are now nearly worn out. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move that after 2 o'clock nothing shall be done except the consideration of the sundry civil bill when it comes from the Senate, and that then we shall take a further recess until 9 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. WELLER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, to take a recess until 8 o'clock in the morning.

The House divided; and there were—ay 1, noes 44.

Mr. VALENTINE. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. WELLER.

Mr. VALENTINE. By way of compromise, I ask the House to agree to take a recess until half past 1 o'clock for the purpose of considering the sundry civil bill as it comes from the Senate; that a motion may be considered as made and agreed to to non-concur in the Senate amendments; and that then the Speaker shall have power to appoint the conferees on the part of the House, after which the House will take a recess until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, in the chair). Is there objection to that?

Mr. VAN EATON. Yes, I object.

Mr. VALENTINE. Then let us have the result announced of the vote by tellers.

The House again divided on Mr. PETTIBONE's motion to take a recess until 8 o'clock; and the tellers reported—ayes 6, noes 24.

Mr. VALENTINE. Still no quorum has voted.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move the House do now adjourn (12 o'clock and 15 minutes a. m., March 3).

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. We either ought to adjourn or take a recess.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 69.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. LAMB. I ask by unanimous consent the House take up the Mexican pension bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question again recurs on the motion to take a recess until 8 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The tellers will resume their places, as a quorum has not yet voted.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House take a recess until 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. VALENTINE. I object, unless some understanding can be reached.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. With the understanding that nothing shall be done except to receive the amendments of the Senate to the sundry civil bill and send them to conference.

Mr. LORE. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the House take a recess until 3 o'clock.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not in order, unless the previous motions to take a recess are withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. VALENTINE. I object.

Mr. HOUK. I ask unanimous consent of the House that I may be heard for one minute in regard to a matter of great importance to a very large number of people.

Mr. BENNETT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HOUK. I ask unanimous consent— [Cries of "Regular order!"] If the House will listen to me but for one minute—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. HOUK. I would be glad if the House would give me unanimous consent for one minute—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. HOUK. I appeal to gentlemen to give unanimous consent that I may make a brief statement. Here is a bill— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, without objection, will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee for one minute.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. BLAND. Regular order.

Mr. HOUK. Here is a list of the names of persons whose accounts have been audited by the Departments of the Government—

Mr. BLAND. I have objected to this all the while.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized the gentleman for one minute.

Mr. BLAND. Well, he can have one minute, if that is all, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been passed every session of Congress heretofore as a matter of course.

Mr. HOLMAN. For sixteen years.

Mr. HOUK. It contains the claims which have been audited by the various Departments of the Government after the most careful scrutiny and investigation.

There are a very large number of these claims contained in this bill, and, as I have said, it has been invariably passed heretofore, generally under a suspension of the rules. Here we are now within twenty-four hours of adjournment. If this bill does not pass these people will be compelled to wait more than twelve months for honest debts which have been thoroughly investigated, considered, allowed, recommended, and audited by the authorized auditing officers of the Government. I appeal, then, to members to let this bill be taken up and passed. It has always passed heretofore almost unchallenged.

Mr. KEIFER. Has that been reported by a committee of this House at this session?

Mr. HOUK. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEIFER. What committee?

Mr. HOUK. The Committee on War Claims. I say this, Mr. Speaker: that committee has gone into the most careful scrutiny of this matter; has looked into every case, with very few exceptions, covered by this bill, and in the view of that committee it is absolute justice to these claimants that this bill should become a law. It is one of the appropriation bills of Congress, and ought to be passed. I ask gentlemen, therefore, to let us take it up and pass it. I refer to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] in support of what I have said as to this bill heretofore.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Does this bill contain anything but audited accounts?

Mr. HOUK. No, sir; not a thing, as I understand it; and I ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. ROWELL] to state what course the committee has taken in the examination of the accounts?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Has not the minute expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for a moment or two.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, in regard to this bill permit me to say that the committee examined into every claim allowed by the auditing officers of the Government, taking up claim after claim and looking carefully through them as has never been done before. They took up the cases in their order and threw out on amendments and motions some five or six claims that they thought ought not to have been audited, and reported the bill by the unanimous vote of the committee after a close scrutiny and careful examination of nearly every one of the claims that came in.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be indulged to make a very brief statement in reference to this bill. I wish to say that the request of my colleague from Tennessee is one that ought to prevail. As has been stated by him, this bill pertains to claims all of which have been audited by the accounting officers of the Government, and all of which have been in the first place examined by quartermaster's agents of the United States and approved by the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. LAMB. What sort of claims does this bill contain?

Mr. McMILLIN. Audited war claims; and I may be permitted to say to my friend from Indiana that if it does not contain claims of citizens of his State it is the first bill bearing the claims so reported from the Quartermaster-General in the course of my experience in Congress that they were not interested in, for they suffered losses of this kind.

They are what is known as the 4th of July claims, under the act passed on the 4th of July, 1864, which provided for the payment of claims of citizens for property taken for the use of the Army of the United States. These claims are examined by quartermasters' agents throughout the country in States to which the act applies, and are reported to the accounting officers of the Department, and are transmitted to Congress after thorough examination.

Mr. THOMPSON. And it has been uniformly passed.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. What States are interested in this matter?

Mr. McMILLIN. It pertains to a great many of the States; to all of the border States, I believe.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Yes; Kentucky and Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLIN. All the border States. In response to the gentleman from Alabama who asks what States it applies to I will say that I do not remember how many are represented in this bill, but heretofore bills which have been passed embraced the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio, Indiana, West Virginia, Maryland, and probably others.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Missouri.

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes; Missouri and Pennsylvania. I do not know what other States have been embraced in it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I must object to this proceeding.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do hope the gentleman from Alabama will not interpose an objection to this. The Government has owed these claims for more than twenty years, and to fail to pay them now is an outrage against every citizen and an unjustifiable postponement of justice. These unfortunate claimants do not get a cent of interest during this long delay. What justice is there in postponing payment?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I have a claim here for a citizen of my own district in Alabama, which is just as meritorious and honest a claim as any of these, and I can not pass that claim through this House.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us take it up then and pass it. I hope I have fairness enough to do at least justice to any citizen of this Republic.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Unless we can pass that claim I shall object to this.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will aid the gentleman in his efforts to get a meritorious claim through.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas, rose.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to say to both the gentleman from Tennessee and—

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I have consumed during the present session of Congress but very little of the time of this House, and I appeal now to members on the ground of humanity that they may hear me for two or three minutes upon a subject foreign to this one we have under consideration, but of importance to the people of my State.

Mr. VALENTINE. If we are to go into any new subject I must object.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I would feel that I was neglecting a public duty if I failed to call the attention of this House to this matter if an opportunity is offered me to do so.

On the Speaker's table is a Senate bill authorizing the construction of a Federal jail at Fort Smith, Ark.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I rise to a question of order. Under what rule is this debate now going on?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. CANNON. Is it not too late to make objection after the gentleman from Arkansas commenced speaking?

Mr. TUCKER. It seems we are all giving our experiences. I would like to give mine. One gentleman has spoken of claims that the Government has owed for twenty years. I have a bill on the Speaker's table that has passed the Senate, to restore to a constituent of mine $400 that were taken from him by unjust taxation seventeen years ago. I want to have that bill pass the House so that this man may have his money returned to him. I appeal to the House to let that bill be taken up and passed.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I would like to tell my experience also.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask unanimous consent that the election case be withdrawn so as to allow all these matters to be brought up.

Mr. TUCKER. I appeal to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE], my colleague on the Judiciary Committee, to allow this bill to be taken up.

The SPEAKER. All this is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Objection was made.

Mr. WELLER. I hope the Chair will not be partial, so as to fail to recognize me.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman from Georgia making a statement?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Unless I be permitted to go on, I object.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to the gentleman from Arkansas being heard.

Mr. WELLER addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Iowa rise?

Mr. WELLER. I rise for the express purpose of being recognized by the Chair. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa that he can not recognize him unless he discloses for what purpose he desires to be recognized.

Mr. WELLER. I will state what I propose. I desire to secure unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 252). I send it to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. VAN EATON. I object, unless the gentleman provides for the payment being made in standard silver dollars.

Mr. WELLER. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BRATTON] has a privileged report from the Committee on Printing in reference to the eulogies on the late Senator Anthony. It is a privileged report, although not as against the election case. Is there objection to the gentleman from South Carolina making the report?

There was no objection.

EULOGIES UPON THE LATE SENATOR ANTHONY.

Mr. BRATTON, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2577) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Henry B. Anthony.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be printed of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Henry B. Anthony, a Senator from Rhode Island, with an account of his funeral, prepared under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing, 12,000 copies; of which 4,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 8,000 for the use of the House of Representatives; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to have printed a portrait of said Henry B. Anthony to accompany said eulogies; and for engraving and printing said portrait the sum of $500, or so much as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Would it be proper to amend so as to give the Senate 8,000 copies and take 4,000 copies for the House?

The SPEAKER. That amendment is in order, if the gentleman desires to offer it.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the amendment?

The SPEAKER. None has been offered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRATTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF REPORT—WASHINGTON MONUMENT CEREMONIES.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I ask unanimous consent to call up the Senate bill providing for the printing of the proceedings had here on the occasion of the dedication of the Washington Monument. The House passed a resolution and sent it to the Senate, which has not been acted upon by the Senate. The Senate passed a bill covering the same subject, differing somewhat from the House resolution. The bill is now on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take up the Senate bill indicated. The title will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. While that bill is being looked for I ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. There is one request for unanimous consent now pending. There can not be two pending at the same time.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 2666) to provide for the printing of the report and proceedings of the commission to provide suitable ceremonies for the dedication of the Washington Monument.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the report and proceedings of the commission to provide suitable ceremonies for the dedication of the Washington Monument, together with the engraved card attached thereto, be printed under the direction of the Committee on Printing; and that 26,500 additional copies be printed, 8,000 copies of the same for the use of the Senate; 16,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; 500 copies for distribution by Lieut. General P. H. Sheridan, United States Army, to the civil and military organizations which participated in the proceedings; 500 copies for the Washington National Monument Association for distribution among its members; 500 copies for distribution by Col. Thomas L. Casey, engineer, among the mechanics and workmen employed in the erection of the monument; 500 copies to the Hon. R. C. Winthrop; and 500 copies to the Hon. John W. Daniel; and for the purpose of defraying the expense of printing the attached card the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I will state to the House that the only respect in which this bill differs from the resolution already passed by the House is that the bill provides for the printing of the engraved card, which was not provided for by the resolution, and this bill also provides for giving five hundred copies to each of the two orators. Those are the only respects in which the bill differs from the resolution already passed.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire if the bill is open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. WELLER. I move that the bill be amended so as to make the number of copies 35,000, the distribution to be in the same ratio as provided in the bill.

The SPEAKER was proceeding to put the question when Mr. WELLER withdrew the amendment.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Speaker, I now demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. DORSHEIMER] how many copies this bill would give to each Senator and how many to each Member of the House.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. I have not figured it up—it provides for 8,000 copies for the Senate, and 16,000 for the House.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. It gives every Senator 105 copies and every Member 49 copies.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DORSHEIMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make two privileged reports from the Committee on Printing, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, are these reports subject to objection when they are read?

The SPEAKER. They are subject to the question of consideration.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is this a conference report?

The SPEAKER. It is not. It is a privileged report from the Committee on Printing, as the Chair understands.

Mr. SPRINGER. But it can come in only by unanimous consent. I do not know what matters they relate to, and I may desire to object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know with certainty that this is a privileged report; but certain reports from the Committee on Printing are privileged.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not as against the present order, which is the question of the highest privilege, the right of a member to his seat.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on a motion for a recess.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is a contested-election case pending.

The SPEAKER. There is no question pending on the report of the Committee on Elections.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let this report from the Committee on Printing be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 25, 1885.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1885 be printed, and that there be printed 11,000 extra copies, of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House, 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and 500 for sale by the Public Printer under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication, and 10 per cent. thereto added; illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the joint direction of the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was concurred in.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASTRONOMICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 25, 1885.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the annual volume of Astronomical and Meteorological Observations of the Naval Observatory for the years 1881 and 1882 be printed, and that 2,000 additional copies of each volume be printed, of which 400 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 800 copies for the use of the House, and 800 copies for the use of the Navy Department, or for sale at the cost of paper and printing, in accordance with section 422 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The resolution was concurred in.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FOURTH OF JULY CLAIMS.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, a while ago I asked unanimous consent to make a statement in reference to Executive Document 119. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] objected, but he withdraws his objection.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection?

Mr. VALENTINE. Regular order.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] demands the regular order, which cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. This is a matter of a good deal of interest.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must make his appeal to the gentleman from Nebraska. The Chair has no discretion in the matter.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection to the gentleman from Georgia making his statement.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, Executive Document 119 is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of claims which have arisen under the act of July 4, 1864. By virtue of that act the Quartermaster-General, the Commissary-General, and the Third Auditor of the Treasury are required to examine and consider certain claims, and it is made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to report them to Congress at each session. In the Forty-fourth Congress this document, covering claims amounting to about $500,000, was reported by Mr. Edwards of Illinois, then chairman of the Committee on War Claims. It passed the House at both sessions of that Congress by unanimous consent, and it has always passed without objection until, I think, the last session of the last Congress, when some objection was made, but I believe it finally passed the House. This time the claims amount to only $228,000. Now, the law did not contemplate that these claims should be examined by the House. The act provided that they should be examined by the Quartermaster-General, the Commissary-General, and the Third Auditor. They have always passed in the way I have stated, and I think it will be a great injustice to these claimants if this bill does not now pass. This is not the case of ordinary claims on the Calendar which we reserve to ourselves the right to examine. These are cases the examination of which has been delegated to the officers I have designated, and I trust that the House will see the justice of doing what has been done heretofore in reference to these cases and allow them to pass without objection. The committee have reported these claims unanimously.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that the House may get at the bill to which he refers by simply disposing of this contested-election case.

Mr. KEAN. You want to take $11,000 out of the Treasury on that.

Mr. WELLER. Well, if he is entitled to it give it to him.

Mr. KEAN. But he is not.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend understands very well the difficulty there is in getting an election case out of the way.

We have been in a minority ourselves, and have had some difficulty of this sort. I trust that neither this election case nor any other reason will prevent the House from doing what it has always done, and rightly done, with reference to these audited claims.

Mr. McMILLIN. This claim ought to be passed, and I hope the gentleman from Alabama will make no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPRINGER. I object. I would be delighted to have this bill passed; and I ask gentlemen on the other side to cease their opposition to this election case, and let us fix a time to consider and dispose of it, and then we can take up these other matters. I think the right of a member to his seat on the floor is a question of the highest importance. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee being for a recess till 8 o'clock to-morrow.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 28, noes 45.

Several MEMBERS. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. HEPBURN were appointed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I desire to know whether it requires a quorum to vote down a motion for a recess.

The SPEAKER. It requires a quorum to decide it either way.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Another tribute to our rules.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported 1 in the affirmative, 36 in the negative—no quorum voting.

During the count by tellers the following proceedings took place:

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order for me to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of joint resolution 252?

The SPEAKER. The House is taking a vote.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent that the House take up the joint resolution to print the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution.

The SPEAKER. A vote of the House is being taken.

Mr. GIBSON. I am led to believe there will be no objection to putting upon its passage the bill which I hold in my hand. I am assured by some gentlemen who have been objecting to general business that they think this bill ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. But the House is taking a vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate further insisted on its amendments numbered 1 and 29 to the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. BUDD. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 147. I do not think any one will object.

A MEMBER. What is it about?

Mr. BUDD. It is for the erection of a post-office building in San Francisco.

Several members objected.

Mr. BUDD. We never have had a post-office building there. Our postal business is done away down on the old water-front, in a little cubby-hole. San Francisco has 300,000 inhabitants.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a point of order. Is it proper for the gentleman to proceed after objection has been made?

The SPEAKER. Not without unanimous consent.

A MEMBER. There was no objection to the gentleman proceeding with his remarks.

The SPEAKER. Objection was made to considering the bill, but no objection was made to the gentleman proceeding with his statement.

Mr. BUDD. As the time is not being occupied with anything else, I hope I may be allowed to conclude my statement.

In 1800 the tonnage of San Francisco was 235,000; in 1882 it had a tonnage of more than 1,000,000 tons. In 1860 its imports amounted to more than $9,000,000; in 1882 to over $51,600,000. In 1860 the exports were more than $2,900,000; in 1882 over $52,400,000. The postal revenue for 1860 was $154,872; in 1882 it amounted to $558,133; and to-day San Francisco, one of the largest and most important cities in the United States, yields a net revenue of some $400,000.

Mr. KEAN. How much has been spent there on public buildings?

Mr. BUDD. Not a single dollar has been spent on a post-office building.

Mr. KEAN. What other public buildings are there?

Mr. BUDD. The Government has built a mint there, of which the Democracy will have control in a few days.

The building in which our post-office business is now transacted is down on the old water-front and is very inconvenient, not sufficient to afford proper facilities to our people. We are using for a post-office the lower floor and basement of the old custom-house. This bill is a Senate bill, and should become a law; hence I ask that it be now taken up and passed.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I suggest that the gentleman have this measure attached to the sundry civil bill in the Senate.

Mr. BUDD. This bill has already passed the Senate; it passed there more than a year ago, and has since been on the Speaker's table. It should pass here. I know this requires unanimous consent on account of the state of present proceedings. Let it pass. [Cry of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WELLER. I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to permit my resolution to be read to the House. I do not think there will be any objection to it.

The SPEAKER. That is not the regular order, and the regular order has been demanded on both sides of the House.

Mr. WELLER. I was trying to get rid of that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will get rid of it only by having it withdrawn. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to take a recess until 8 o'clock in the morning. [Putting the question. After a pause.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 31.

Mr. WELLER. No quorum.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. As the House has refused to take a recess I ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. The regular order is insisted upon. The point of no quorum has been made, and the Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. PETTIBONE and Mr. WELLER.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 4, noes 12.

Mr. BUDD. I move to take up Senate bill 147. The objection made by the gentleman from Alabama will be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER] objected.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought the gentleman did object.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move there be a call of the House.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 37.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes a. m., March 3) moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask this bill be read from the Clerk's desk. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. PERKINS. I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. LEWIS. Would it be in order to make a statement in which I am interested?

The SPEAKER. It would be if the demand for the regular order is withdrawn. Is the demand for the regular order withdrawn?

Mr. SHIVELY and others objected.

Mr. CALDWELL. I ask to have read for information a resolution for the payment of the employés for the month of March. It is the usual resolution. These boys can not get away unless it is passed. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I hope objection will be withdrawn.

[Cries of "Regular order!"] This is simply to make available the pay of the employés for the month of March. [Cries of "Regular order!"] It was done at the last session, and ought to be done now.

The SPEAKER. Is the regular order insisted upon?

Mr. COOK. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to take a recess.

The SPEAKER. All the motions to take a recess that can be made have been made.

Mr. CALDWELL. My motion is to make available the pay of the employés for the month of March.

Mr. ENGLISH. Otherwise they will have to remain here.

Mr. CALDWELL. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa withdraw his demand for the regular order?

Mr. COOK. The regular is called for by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY].

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon it? Mr. SHIVELY. I do.

Mr. WELLER. I feel I have not been fairly treated. Other matters of less importance than mine have been considered. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] says he has no objection to it.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I ask to submit a report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. It is not now in order; the division of the House discloses the want of a quorum.

Mr. CALDWELL. I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the resolution for our worthy and courteous employés. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I understand there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. There are demands for the regular order on both sides of the House, and they are in the nature of objections.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I have a bill here that I know nobody will object to [cries of "Oh, no; of course not"], and I send it up with the report, and ask that the report and the bill may be read for the information of the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order of course stands until it is withdrawn by gentlemen who make it.

Mr. BURNES. I think I can make a statement that will interest the House—a patriotic suggestion— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BURNES. I believe unanimous consent is given me to make a brief statement of one minute and a half.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Regular order.

Mr. WELLER. I now ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution of the House No. 252 may be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. WELLER. I understand that, Mr. Speaker, but I am going to importune gentlemen to permit me to have this read because I know it will be agreed to. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. If gentlemen will withdraw their demands for the regular order, of course the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. Regular order.

Mr. KEAN. I move a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 29, noes 36.

So the call of the House was not ordered.

Mr. WELLER. No quorum. I think we ought to have members present to transact the public business.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not necessary on this motion.

Mr. WELLER. Can I now ask unanimous consent to call up this resolution? I ask to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the request pending the demand for the regular order.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken; there were on a division—ayes 28, noes 42. So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 636, providing for the erection of a public building at Oshkosh, Wis., and put it upon its passage. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order cuts off such requests.

Mr. GUENTHER. I sincerely hope that no gentleman will insist upon the demand for the regular order as against this bill, which is a very meritorious and important measure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must recognize the demand for the regular order.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I move that the House take a recess for thirty minutes.

The SPEAKER. That, of course, could only be done by unanimous consent, for the reason that all motions in reference to a recess that are permissible under the rule are already pending.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I make this motion, Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness, and ask the unanimous consent of the House to that effect. I understand that the sundry civil bill will be here within that time, and I am serious in making the motion, because we are merely exhausting the Speaker and doing nothing.

Mr. WELLER. If the gentleman would not submit so many motions he would not exhaust the Speaker so much.

The SPEAKER. The Chair regrets that the motion could only be entertained by unanimous consent. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. We ought to take a recess to give the reporters and other officers of the House some opportunity to rest.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to take a recess.

Mr. MCADOO. I move a call of the House. I wish to preserve the order and dignity of the House and the decorum of our proceedings, and therefore submit that motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. MILLS and others. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I think it is only proper that we should give the reporters some rest; and I hope that we will at least put a stop to unnecessary talking if we can not proceed with the public business.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 25, noes 29.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. LACEY. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LACEY. If this vote discloses the absence of a quorum can we proceed to the consideration of any business whatever until a quorum shall appear?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUTCHINS. How did you vote?

Mr. REED, of Maine. It does not make any difference how I voted. I voted the right way, of course.

Mr. MILLS. I called for the yeas and nays on the motion so as to give the reporters a little rest.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Has the gentleman the right to make the motion to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman has the right to move a reconsideration when there is no record of the vote, the presumption being that all voted on the prevailing side.

Mr. REED, of Maine. We do not want to wear out our clerks in this way. It is not right, and there is no necessity for calling the roll on this motion.

The question being taken on the motion to reconsider the vote ordering the yeas and nays, it was agreed to—ayes 45, noes 21.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Now, Mr. Speaker, out of consideration for the Speaker himself, for the reporters, and the clerks, while we are waiting for the sundry civil bill to come from the Senate, I suggest that by unanimous consent we take a recess for thirty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I can state, if the House will permit me, that I have information of the passage of the sundry civil bill by the Senate, and I think it will be here within half an hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is very proper that we should take a recess for half an hour while waiting for that bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask by unanimous consent that the House may now take a recess for thirty minutes.

Mr. MILLS. That is right; give all a rest for that length of time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Suppose we should have a yeas-and-nays vote and it should disclose the fact that no quorum is present, would not the Chair be compelled to take official notice of that fact, and would we not be placed in the position of being unable to transact any other business whatever until a quorum had appeared?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks when the record shows on a call of the yeas and nays there is not a quorum present business must cease until a quorum appears.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask that by unanimous consent a recess be taken for thirty minutes.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I hope not. If the House will allow me I should like to entertain it for a few moments with the consideration of a bill for the erection of a public building at Williamsport, Pa.

The SPEAKER. There is a matter pending. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] that the House take a recess for thirty minutes?

Mr. SPRINGER. All other motions for a recess being withdrawn?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Nothing is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois can object if he desires to do so.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire, if this request for a recess be agreed to, that all other motions be withdrawn.

Mr. HEPBURN. You know we will not do that.

Mr. MILLS. Let us take a recess and rest the clerks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock a. m. Tuesday, March 3) the House took a recess for thirty minutes.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m. Tuesday, March 3.

PAYMENT OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS FOR MARCH.

Mr. CALDWELL. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution for the immediate payment of the officers and employés of the Senate and of the House for the month of March.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I believe I had the floor at the time the House took the recess.

Mr. CALDWELL. I am satisfied if this joint resolution be understood there will be no objection to it. It is simply to pay in advance the employés of the Senate and of the House for the month of March. It is not extra pay. They are on the annual roll. It is simply a matter of accommodation to gentlemen who have constantly accommodated us.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the resolution be reported.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

A joint resolution authorizing the immediate payment of the officers and employés of the Senate and of the House for the month of March.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the officers and employés of the Senate and of the House borne upon the annual roll their respective compensation, including the Capitol police, for the month of March, 1895, as soon as practicable after the adjournment of this session of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest that that is hardly broad enough. It applies only to the employés on the annual roll. There is a very considerable class who are not on the annual roll, but who are paid for the long session for eight months and for the short session for four months. This would not apply to them. I suggest this course: that the joint resolution shall be passed when, after consultation with the Clerk, it is ascertained exactly what class of persons are entitled to receive the compensation for the month of March. I am satisfied that they are a much larger class than those named in the joint resolution. Quite a large number of persons are employed for the session, which means four months, and yet they would not get the pay for that additional month under this resolution. I suggest that after consultation has been had with the Clerk as to what the terms of the joint resolution exactly should be, it should then be submitted to the House and passed.

Mr. RANDALL. I am inclined to think the session clerks will get their salaries independent of this resolution.

Mr. CALDWELL. They will.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is certain that this is right I have no objection.

Mr. CALDWELL. This is in the exact terms of the resolution which has been passed heretofore session after session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 346) was read three times, and passed. Mr. CALDWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 8102. I wish to state this bill makes no appropriation. The facts are these—

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I understand that I am entitled to the floor; but I will yield for a few moments to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will state to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN] a fact that I think will be sufficient to justify the indulgence he has kindly yielded me. A railroad is organized to be built to some coal mines in my State. A fellow-citizen of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is interested therein. It is an immense enterprise, and they can not proceed without the right to cross the Cumberland River. It is a bill for the purpose of giving the assent of Congress to the construction of a bridge. I hope there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEAN and Mr. VALENTINE. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill (H. R. 8102) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a railroad bridge by the East and Middle Tennessee Railroad Company over the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers was read at length.

Mr. VALENTINE. The House seems now to be in a state of good feeling. I ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. One matter is now pending.

Mr. VALENTINE. Unanimous consent was not given for its consideration. I said, "Read the bill first." I ask this of the House. We have to wait until the sundry civil bill comes from the Senate. I ask that while we are waiting its arrival the Speaker proceed to recognize gentleman to call up bills for consideration under the morning-hour rule, which allows ten minutes for debate—five minutes in favor of the bill and five minutes against it.

Mr. COOK. I object.

Mr. VALENTINE. Then I give notice that nothing shall be passed here to-night with my consent.

Mr. WILKINS. Did not the objection to the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] come too late? The Speaker asked if there were objections, and there were none.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] said, "Let the bill be read."

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman withdraws his objection.

Mr. VALENTINE. I do, if the objection is withdrawn to my request for the consideration of bills under the ten-minute rule. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COOK] withdraw his objection?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I understand the objection is withdrawn on both sides.

The SPEAKER. It is not withdrawn.

Mr. COOK. I want to say that, believing the Constitution imposes on the House the duty of judging of the election of one of its members whose case is now before the House, nothing shall be transacted until this case is disposed of.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] seems to have withdrawn, probably to take a nap or for some such purpose, I suggest that we lay aside the election case. [Laughter.]

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by a number of members that I repeat the proposition I made a while ago asking unanimous consent that until the sundry civil bill reaches the House the Speaker now entertain motions under the special rule for the consideration of such bills as members may call up, leaving the general status exactly as it is at present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] asks unanimous consent to proceed under the special rule of the House recently adopted until the sundry civil appropriation bill is received from the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I hope it will be in order for me to state one thing: The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN] yielded the floor to me a while ago, and as an act of courtesy and as an act of justice to him I ask that he be permitted to resume it now.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I understand there has been a ruling on that point.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. Is the demand for the regular order withdrawn?

Mr. CALDWELL. As I understand it, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN] had the floor without objection.

The SPEAKER. Before the recess the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN] rose and stated, according to the recollection of the Chair, that he had a matter with which he proposed to "entertain" the House, but somebody objected, and immediately the recess was taken. The gentleman did not submit any motion. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN] now asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of a bill in relation to a public building at Williamsport, Pa.

Mr. VALENTINE. Regular order.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that the objection to my bill is insisted upon, and I hope it will not be.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that the objection has been withdrawn.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, we may just as well understand this matter. This stream to which that bill relates is a navigable one, which is being improved by this Government at great expense, and I object to building any bridge across it unless after a thorough investigation.

Mr. McMILLIN. It has been investigated. The report of the Secretary of War is here. He submitted the question to the local engineers and the matter was delayed until their reports came, and they are embodied in the report of the Secretary.

Mr. GIBSON. I just want to go further, Mr. Speaker, and say that no drawbridge across a running stream—

The SPEAKER. There is nothing before the House. The regular order is insisted upon on both sides of the House.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, we shall need a quorum here in a few minutes, and I think we had better send for one. There will be nothing further done here to-night without a quorum. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] wants a quorum, and I think we had better have a call of the House. I make that motion.

The question was taken on ordering a call of the House; and there were—ayes 26, noes 41.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now take a recess.

Mr. BISBEE. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to ask unanimous consent to move to suspend the rules to pass the bill for the relief of General Grant?

The SPEAKER. Not while the regular order is insisted upon. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN] states that the objection to the request made by him to take up a public-building bill is withdrawn.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. VALENTINE. There is no quorum here, so we can not do any business. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] wants a quorum.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table—

The SPEAKER. Objection is made and the regular order is demanded by gentlemen on both sides of the House, so that the Chair can not entertain a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. TUCKER. I will ask the House, if I can get attention for a moment—

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. TUCKER. Who makes the objection?

The SPEAKER. Several gentlemen are demanding the regular order and insisting that no business shall be done except the regular business before the House.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. That motion can be entertained only by unanimous consent, because, as the Chair has stated several times, all the motions that can be made with reference to a recess, under the rules of the House, are now pending.

Mr. TUCKER. The objection is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. Is the demand for the regular order withdrawn? Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that it is withdrawn. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to the motion made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE].

The House divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 32.

Mr. HOUK. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. COOK and Mr. HOUK were appointed.

The House proceeded to divide; but before the tellers announced the result of the count the following proceedings took place:

Mr. VALENTINE. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH, of Missouri). That motion is not in order. The House is dividing.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules in order to take up and put on its passage Senate bill 1372, to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is dividing, and the motion is not in order.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, a gentleman who has just returned from the other end of the Capitol states that the Senate has taken a recess until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning. If that be true, I do not see any necessity of our remaining here longer.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, will this House hear the story of two men who entered the Army at the beginning of the war as private soldiers and after serving bravely for four years under the flag that hangs so gracefully over your head, sir, met with a misfortune which a bill now pending in this House is designed to remedy? For four years as private soldiers they marched to "the music of the Union."

A MEMBER. Do they want an appropriation?

Mr. BURNES. They ask no appropriation; they ask a simple act of justice. Entering the Army as poor boys, and serving through the war, they earned the rank respectively of colonel and lieutenant-colonel. Commissions were sent to them from the War Department, but unfortunately these commissions arrived a day or two after these soldiers were mustered out.

They ask no pay, no emoluments. They simply ask at the hands of the country the honor of these titles of colonel and lieutenant-colonel, which they won. The bill has passed the Senate of the United States, and has been reported favorably by a committee of this House, the report being made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE]. The bill asks no appropriation of money; it proposes nothing but to do an act of simple justice to these plain men who fairly earned this distinction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] asks unanimous consent to call up for immediate consideration the Senate bill to which he has referred. Is there objection?

Mr. VALENTINE. I object.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Let the bill be read subject to objection.

Mr. VALENTINE. I object.

Mr. McCOMAS. Let the report be read.

Mr. VALENTINE. There must be a quorum here before any further business is done.

Mr. BURNES. I believe it is the right of a member desiring to call up a bill to have it read before objections are made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is dividing. The proposition of the gentleman from Missouri requires unanimous consent, and objection has been made.

Mr. HATCH, of Michigan. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers have not reported the result of their count, and the motion of the gentleman from Michigan is not in order.

Mr. HATCH, of Michigan. Are the tellers going to stand there all night?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hopes gentlemen will vote. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BELFORD. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration Senate bill 1504. Let it be read, subject to objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent—

Mr. HATCH, of Michigan. How can that motion be entertained if the motion to adjourn is not in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] asked for unanimous consent.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1504) for the erection of a public building at Pueblo, Colo.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is provided for in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. BELFORD. It is not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. VALENTINE. I object to any business proceeding until there is a quorum.

Mr. BELFORD. Is it possible for me to say that a man from a Western State objects to a Western measure?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado is not in order.

Mr. VALENTINE. I am very sorry—

Mr. BELFORD. You are the only one in this House that objects, and I want the RECORD to show it.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution—

Mr. WELLER. I object.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Let it be read for information.

Mr. WELLER. No, sir. I have been trying to get my joint resolution read for information. I will withdraw my objection if I can have my joint resolution read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa is not in order.

Mr. CASSIDY. I ask the House to allow me to have considered a bill to pay a postmaster in my State $171 on account of vouchers which were burned. The claim is duly authenticated by the Post-Office Department. It is a small matter and I ask that it be considered. It is a Senate bill, which has the recommendation of the Department and has been unanimously reported by the committee that have examined it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. VALENTINE. I object.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I understand that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER] withdrew his objection to my resolution and there was no other objection that I heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska has objected to the consideration of any measure.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. The gentleman from Nebraska states to me that he did not make any objection.

Mr. VALENTINE. I did not object to the reading of that resolution. If I understand its purport I think it is in the line of our duty to-night. I have heard of it but have not heard it read.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I call for the reading of my resolution.

Mr. WELLER. I have not withdrawn my objection.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Shortly after the close of the late war— [Laughter and applause and cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will announce the result.

Mr. COOK. Eleven ayes and 25 noes.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, rose. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I ask to take up the Blair educational bill. I believe we are agreed on that. I hope there will be no objection. It is an important measure.

Mr. KEAN. I object.

Mr. JORDAN. I ask to take up a bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been called and gentlemen say they will object to any measure.

Mr. WELLER. I withdraw my objection to the reading of the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ADAMS]. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. It is entirely useless to ask unanimous consent so long as there are calls for the regular order. It makes a great deal of labor for the Official Reporters of the House, and amounts to nothing. Whenever the demand for the regular order is withdrawn the Chair will take pleasure in recognizing gentlemen.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I understood the gentleman from Iowa withdrew his objection.

Mr. VALENTINE. I understand the gentleman's resolution is in reference to the subject we are acting on. If so, I should like to hear it read.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I demand the regular order of business. Mr. KEAN. Would it be in order to take a recess for fifteen minutes?

The SPEAKER. It will not, as all the motions for a recess that can be entertained have been made. The tellers report 11 ayes and 27 noes.

Mr. VALENTINE. No quorum (3 o'clock and 40 minutes a. m. March 3). I move that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 34.

Mr. VALENTINE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 34, nays 52, not voting 238; as follows:

Mr. PUSEY with Mr. HOLMES, until 9 o'clock March 3.

Mr. MORGAN with Mr. MORRILL.

Mr. DEUSTER with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. BREWER, of New York.

Mr. PEEL with Mr. NELSON.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee for a recess.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say that my information from the Senate is that the sundry civil bill can not be here until 5 o'clock, and I make the motion that the House take a recess until 9 o'clock.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I move that the House do now adjourn. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HUNT. I object.

Mr. VALENTINE. I make the point of order that there are amendments pending now in the second degree.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 9 o'clock this morning.

Mr. McCOMAS. Say 10 o'clock.

Mr. RANDALL. No; 9 o'clock. That is as late as we ought to make it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

And accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes a. m. Tuesday) the House took a recess until 9 o'clock a. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired the House (at 9 o'clock a. m., Tuesday, March 3, 1885) resumed its session.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move that the House take a further recess until 10.55 o'clock to-day.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to a recess, and hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move to amend the motion by taking a recess until 10.50 o'clock.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to state to gentlemen that the sundry civil bill will be here in a few moments.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend the amendment by taking a recess until 10.45 o'clock.

Mr. SPRINGER. Gentlemen on the other side are making a sad mistake in filibustering this way.

Mr. VALENTINE. Gentlemen will judge for themselves on that point.

BRIDGE OVER THE CUMBERLAND AND CANEY FORK RIVERS.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 8102) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a railroad bridge by the East and Middle Tennessee Railroad Company over the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers, and put it upon its passage. I think there can be no objection to this bill, which has been already read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the East and Middle Tennessee Railroad Company be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge, and approaches thereto, over the Cumberland River at the most accessible point in or near the corporate limits of Carthage, county of Smith, and State of Tennessee. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railroad trains and wagons and travelers across said river.

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route; and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States: Provided, That the United States may construct a postal telegraph over said bridge without charge therefor.

SEC. 3. That if said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, the spans thereof shall not be less than one hundred and sixty-four feet in length in the clear, and the main span shall be over the main channel of the river. The lowest part of the superstructure of said bridge shall be at least thirty-four feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, and the bridge shall be at right angles to and its piers parallel with the current of the river: Provided, That if the same shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the draw or pivot shall be over the main channel at an accessible point, and the spans shall not be less than one hundred and sixty feet in the clear, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with and the bridge itself at right angles to the current of the river, and the spans shall not be less than ten feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the lowest part of the superstructure of said bridge: Provided also, That the said draw shall be opened promptly by said corporation, upon reasonable signal, for the passage of boats; and said corporation shall maintain, at its own expense, from sunset till sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe, and shall also place and maintain such sheer-booms and other guides necessary for the safe passage of vessels and other water-craft as may be required by the Secretary of War. No bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river; and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and all such alterations shall be made and all such obstructions be removed at the expense of said corporation; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be brought in the circuit court of the United States of the middle district of Tennessee in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be located, or in the circuit court of the State of Tennessee for that circuit: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers, or to exempt this bridge from the operations of the same: And provided further, That the right is reserved to regulate tolls and freights over said bridge.

SEC. 4. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridge, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of one mile above and one mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved, and the right to require any changes in said structure, or its entire removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

SEC. 6. That the East and Middle Tennessee Railroad Company is hereby also authorized to construct a railroad bridge over the Caney Fork River at such point between the mouth of said river and the Buffalo Valley as may be necessary in the building of their road, subject to the provisions and limitations contained in the preceding sections.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McMILLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask unanimous consent to take up the following Senate bill—

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is the usual magnanimity of the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to any unanimous consent for gentlemen who obstruct the public business.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist on his objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Gentlemen have seen fit to filibuster away the time of the House. Now I do not propose that they shall pass bills through by consent. One thing certain, they can not filibuster away the inauguration of Mr. Cleveland, which will take place to-morrow in spite of them.

Mr. VALENTINE. I supposed the gentleman would object. It is not unexpected. It is his usual courtesy to this side.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2686) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts of the United States, the post-office, and other Government offices at Williamsport, Pa.," and making an additional appropriation therefor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Very well.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Speaker's table for present consideration a Senate bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that the jail bill?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles, namely:

A bill (H. R. 4089) to empower the commissioners of the District of Columbia to examine the claim of and provide for the payment of Outerbridge Horsey, assignee;

A bill (H. R. 612) for the relief of Brannin, Summers & Co.;

A bill (H. R. 449) to provide for the appraisal and sale of lands in the town of Peru, Dubuque County, Iowa; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 341) to authorize the printing of 50,000 copies of the second annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the year 1885.

It further announced that the Senate had passed a resolution providing for the printing of the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of precious metals in the United States for the year 1885; and further that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 8256) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

SUNDY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. In compliance with the unanimous wish of the members of the Committee on Appropriations I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the sundry civil appropriation bill, and to move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments, that they be printed, and that a conference be asked with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the sundry civil appropriation bill with Senate amendments, for the purpose of non-concurring in the Senate amendments and asking a committee of conference.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I believe there is no objection to the bill which I desire to call up. I should like very much to make a statement in explanation of it.

Mr. RANDALL. I shall object to anything of that kind until the public business can be attended to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I would suggest that we should proceed to pass the Senate pension bills which have not yet been acted on.

Mr. RANDALL. I shall object to everything until the public business is attended to. I move to suspend the rules and that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments to the sundry civil appropriation and ask for a committee of conference.

The question being taken on Mr. RANDALL's motion, the Speaker stated that in the judgment of the Chair the "ayes" had it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 4.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. I move a call of the House.

The Senate met at 1 o'clock p. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings be for the present dispensed with.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for. The reading of the Journal will be proceeded with.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, March 2.

Mr. MITCHELL (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.). I move to dispense with the further reading of the Journal, with a view to ask the Senate to take up House pension bills favorably reported from the Committee on Pensions, and put them on their passage at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The reading of the Journal will proceed.

Mr. DAWES (at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.). I ask unanimous consent to call up the fortifications appropriation bill for consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the objection of the Senator from Kansas to the request that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with still stands, and that the request of the Senator from Massachusetts is not in order. The reading of the Journal will proceed.

Mr. PLUMB. It is always in order to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. DAWES. I did not hear any objection.

Mr. HARRIS. It is certainly in order for the Senator from Massachusetts to ask unanimous consent of the Senate to dispense with the further reading of the Journal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was not the request that the Senator from Massachusetts made. Pending the reading of the Journal the Senator from Massachusetts asked that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the fortifications bill.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the fortifications bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas objects. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the Journal.

The Secretary proceeded with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. DAWES (at 1 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.). May I renew my request for unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the Journal?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the objection made by the Senator from Kansas must be considered as still operating.

Mr. DAWES. There is always a locus penitentia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas has not withdrawn his objection. The Chair thinks it must be treated as pending.

Mr. DAWES. I have no doubt the Senator from Kansas has already repented.

Mr. HALE. It is a very interesting article that is being read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary continued and concluded the reading of the Journal. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Journal will be approved unless there is objection.

COMMITTEE ON STEEL-PRODUCING WORKS.

Mr. HAWLEY. Last July the Senate appointed a select committee of five to make a series of inquiries prescribed in the resolution concerning the production of steel, the manufacture of ordnance, the building of ships, the building of guns, &c. Every one remembers how busy last autumn was, how many of our committee were occupied in the Presidential campaign; nevertheless the committee met and visited the ship-yards and foundries at Boston, the harbor at Newport, establishments in New York, Philadelphia, Chester, Johnstown, Pittsburgh, and a subcommittee went to California and examined a new mine and new products there. We have collected for our report and have in type that which will make a very valuable appendix of five or six hundred pages; but with the hurry and interruptions I have spoken of, the committee could not complete, as it desired to do, its report this winter. I make, therefore, this report of progress, and leave it for the Senate to say what we shall do hereafter. I will say individually that I should like to go on with this work. It is not expensive, as we have managed it economically, and the material before us is rich. We think we have a very valuable appendix so far, but we can do very much better if we can go on through the coming recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut does not ask any order.

Mr. MORGAN. From the same committee I report the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the select committee "to inquire as to the capacity of steel-producing works in the United States" be continued, with leave to complete the duties assigned to them by the resolutions of the Senate, and with the powers conferred upon them heretofore by the Senate, and that they report to the Senate at the session in December, 1885.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

W. H. MURDOUGH.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am free to confess that I do not know whether I am in order or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be unable to inform the Senator until he knows what his purpose is.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I want to ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 8183) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Murdaugh, of Virginia.

Mr. MANDERSON. I certainly do not desire to interpose any objection to that, but I hope the Senator from Virginia will allow us to get through routine business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Virginia that the morning business has not yet been concluded, while it is in order at any time to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Then I withdraw the request. I want to make it during the day. I trust I shall be pardoned for being mistaken as we have two days here in one and I can not tell which day it is.

RAILROAD BRIDGE IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to submit a resolution and ask that it may be read and now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska offers a resolution which will be read.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a moment that I may ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a House bill?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 8102) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a railroad bridge by the East and Middle Tennessee Railroad Company over the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COMMITTEE TO VISIT ALASKA.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed by the Chair, to proceed to Alaska during the recess of Congress, and inquire into and investigate the operation of the act of May 17, 1884, "providing a civil government for Alaska;" whether the system of government established by said act is adequate for the maintenance of order and the protection of the rights of persons and property; whether the said act is being properly executed by the officers appointed under the same; the condition of the natives or Indians of said Territory; their relations to the Government of the United States, and what legislation is required for their proper management; the condition and character of mines, mining claims, and mining titles; the character of land tenures, or possessory or other titles to lands; the present condition and value of the public buildings belonging to the United States in said Territory; the manner in which the laws relating to customs and other laws and regulations have been and are now being executed. Also to inquire into and investigate the past and present condition of the seal fisheries of the Pribilof Islands; whether the Alaska Commercial Company has heretofore complied, and is now complying, with the terms of its lease from, and its agreement with, the United States, and the laws relating to said seal fisheries, or whether the said company has heretofore violated or is now violating the same in any manner; whether the officers of the Government appointed to see that said laws and the conditions of said lease are executed have been and are faithfully performing their duties; and whether the system in operation is adequate and proper for guarding and protecting the interests of the Government and the rights of said company in relation to said seal fisheries. Also, to inquire into the natural resources of said Territory, the character and value of its present and probable products; whether the general land laws, or laws relating to timber or mining lands, should be extended over said Territory; and to examine generally into all matters relating to the development of the said Territory and to the prosperity and welfare of its people. Said committee shall have power to sit in the vacation of the Senate at any place in the United States, to send for persons and papers, to examine witnesses, to appoint a clerk and a stenographer, and shall make report with their recommendations in respect to future legislation to the Senate at the next regular session of Congress. The expenses of said committee, of the clerk, stenographer, witnesses, &c., shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to be certified by the chairman of the committee and audited and allowed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that had better be printed so that we can see it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be printed and lie over.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. The first hour of the morning business having expired I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the unfinished business will first be laid before the Senate.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Maine is not subject to debate. The Senator from New Hampshire simply requests that the unfinished business be first laid before the Senate. The Chair is of the opinion that under the unanimous consent given, the pending order would now be the consideration of House pension business reported favorably on the Calendar; but if the motion of the Senator from Maine is agreed to, the pension bills will of course be displaced.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will ask that the regular order be informally laid aside.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I did not understand whether the Senator from Maine or the Chair stated that the morning hour had expired. I was about to present a report from a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the morning hour by analogy, if not by the rules, expired at 2 o'clock, and in that sense the motion made by the Senator from Maine is in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was not aware of any rule of analogy that applied in the Senate, and I should be very glad if the Chair would cause any such rule or practice to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair confesses that he is unable to find a rule that is adapted by the express mention of hours to the circumstances of this day.

Mr. HALE. If my motion carries I shall have no objection to yielding for reports to be presented and some light, formal business that will not occupy time.

Mr. BLAIR. I supposed it to be the duty of the Chair irrespective of a motion to lay the unfinished business before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business which is the bill (H. R. 7718) restoring John Snyder to the pension-roll. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Maine to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him or to ask that the pending order be informally laid aside?

Mr. HALE. Let it be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks that the pending order be laid aside informally and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not want to object, but I want to ask the Senator from Maine if he will not allow me to call up a bill that will not require debate, and not require one minute to pass it.

Mr. HALE. I should like to do that. I should like to oblige the Senator from Virginia, but there are a dozen Senators who proffer the same request. I am under some burden of responsibility about pushing this appropriation bill. ["Go ahead!"]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order. The deficiency appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that unanimous consent had been given, and the order was executed by laying the bill before the Senate.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I had not yielded the floor, and I object only because I want to pass my bill, and I think the Senator from Maine will allow me to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the condition of business is this: The Chair called for unanimous consent on the request of the Senator from Maine. No objection was made. The Chair then declared that unanimous consent was given and the Senate has proceeded to execute its order, and the deficiency appropriation bill has been laid before the Senate.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The Chair had recognized me and I still held the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is mistaken. The Chair had some time before recognized the Senator, but after that time several Senators were recognized by the Chair.

Mr. HALE. I can solve this trouble very easily. I am willing that the appropriation bill be informally laid aside that the Senator from Virginia may make his report.

W. H. MURDAUGH.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I want to pass a bill. I move to take up House bill 8183, and I desire to state that the only reason I have been so persistent about it grows out of the fact that this man was an Army officer and did happen to owe what he did not know he did owe the United States. The committee declined to remove his disabilities on that account. The fact never having been communicated to him until last week, he has come here and squared his accounts, and I think he ought to have his political disabilities removed.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8183) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Murdaugh, of Virginia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in favor thereof.)

COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. CULLOM. In connection with report made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] I ask leave to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress by a subcommittee or otherwise, to employ a stenographer, and with the same authority given the committee under the resolution of July 6, 1884.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present reception of this resolution? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I ask that it lie over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York objects to its consideration, and the resolution will lie over.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will not do that.

RAILROAD BRIDGE IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. VEST. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be received if there be no objection.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 8102) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a railroad bridge by the East and Middle Tennessee Railroad Company over the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that that bill be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me we ought to go on with the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Michigan.

CLAIMS FOR HORSES AND OTHER PROPERTY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent to have the Committee on Claims discharged from Executive Document No. 101, being a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a supplemental list of claims allowed by that Department under the act of March 3, 1883, for horses and other property lost in the military service, which was referred by mistake to the Committee on Claims and ought to have gone to the Committee on Appropriations for insertion in the deficiency bill. I move that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the document and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the first or formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for consideration, the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations being first passed upon as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the request of the Senator from Maine. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be taken.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of State," after line 11 of section 1, to insert:

For salary of stenographer to the Secretary of State from March 15 to June 30, 1885, $304.71.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 15, to insert:

To enable the Department of State to ascertain what records or other documents are in existence either in France or Spain or the French colonies affecting the rights or claims of American citizens under the act of Congress approved January 20, 1885, entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliation committed by the French prior to the 31st of July, 1801," and to procure said records and documents, or certified copies thereof, the sum of $5,000, in addition to the sum already appropriated for that purpose, this amount to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State and to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 23, to insert:

For payment of a draft of T. McF. Patton, United States consul at Osaka and Hiogo, Japan, drawn in payment of salary of the interpreter at said consulate for the third quarter of 1884, $32.53.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 33, to insert:

To pay to Louise R. A. Wing, the widow of E. Rumsey Wing, late minister of the United States to Ecuador, a sum equal to the salary of said minister for six months, in addition to all legal allowances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 37, to insert:

To pay to Louise F. Hunt, the widow of William H. Hunt, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Russia, a sum equal to the salary of said minister for six months, in addition to all legal allowances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Foreign intercourse," after line 43, to insert:

For payment of the annual rental of legation buildings in Tokio, Japan, up to March 15, 1885, $3,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 74, to insert:

To enable the accounting officers, without the payment of any money from the Treasury, to allow from the unexpended balance of said appropriation for the fiscal year 1883 the amount disbursed by G. H. Heap, secretary of legation at Constantinople, during the fiscal year 1884, in excess of the appropriation for that year, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1884, $550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 98, to insert:

To enable the accounting officers to pay to George P. Pomeroy, late agent and consul-general of the United States at Cairo, Egypt, the amount allowed under section 1740 of the Revised Statutes for his transit from his late post (at Cairo) to his residence in the United States, namely, from July 6, 1884, to August 9, 1884, no appropriation for the salary of the agent and consul-general at Cairo having been provided in the act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, approved July 7, 1884, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1885, $475.54.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out the clause from line 114 to line 117, inclusive, as follows:

To reimburse Thomas B. Van Buren for expenses incurred by him in the fiscal year 1876 for the relief and transmission to the United States of three discharged naval seamen, $47.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 117, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of State to pay the bills of expenses incurred from May 4, 1883, to September 6, 1883, inclusive, by F. W. Rice, then consul of the United States at Colon, in caring for an American vessel, the Mary C. Comery, abandoned by her master and crew in the harbor at that place, $534.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," in the appropriations for "independent Treasury," after line 201, to insert:

For depositary, in addition to his pay as postmaster, being for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 205, to insert:

For depositary, in addition to his pay as postmaster, $700, being the difference between the amount of salary per annum of this officer, $1,500, as fixed by the act of May 8, 1872, and the amount appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Territories," to strike out the clause from line 237 to line 253, inclusive, as follows:

And all suits or proceedings pending in the district courts of Dakota and Washington Territories at the time of the passage of said act, and which would, if instituted after the passage of said act, be required to be brought in the new districts created and provided for in said act, may be transferred by consent of parties to said new district courts, and there disposed of in like manner and with like effect as if the same had been there instituted; and all writs and recognizances relating to such suits and proceedings so transferred shall be considered as belonging to the courts of the said new districts respectively in the same manner and with like effect as if they had issued or had been taken in reference thereto originally; and the counties of Skamania and Spokane, in said Washington Territory, shall constitute part of the fourth judicial district thereof until the Legislature shall meet and otherwise provide.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent that that amendment may be passed over without action at present. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is interested in it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I rose for the purpose of asking an explanation of why the clause is stricken out. I concur with the Senator from Minnesota that it should be allowed to pass over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that this amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations be passed over for the present.

Mr. McMILLAN. There is a report from the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate affecting the question involved in this clause, and the Senator from Massachusetts is absent from the Chamber at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be passed over for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Engraving and printing," to strike out lines 286 and 287, as follows:

For paper, express charges, and printing of national bank notes, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 287, to insert:

For engraving, printing, and finishing United States notes, gold and silver certificates, registered bonds for transfers, and other securities, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 290, to insert:

For engraving (except face-plates), printing, and finishing circulating notes for national banking associations, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "United States Fish Commission," after line 299, to insert:

For propagation of food-fishes, $12,000.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine how this money is to be expended—under whose charge and direction?

Mr. HALE. Perhaps the Senator knows that this is all under the charge of the Fish Commission, of which Professor Baird is the head. It is simply the continuation of the great work which is being done under that commission of propagating the different kinds of food-fish and distributing them throughout the country.

Mr. MORGAN. Under the direction of Professor Baird?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations "for repairs to the vessels of the United States Fish Commission," after the word "cents," in line 310, to strike out:

And the assistant to the United States Fish Commissioner authorized by the act of March 3, 1883 (Statutes at Large, volume 22, page 628), shall hereafter be designated as assistant commissioner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous, Treasury," after line 330, to insert:

For payments of judgments and awards against the United States, $70,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the judgments and awards made in pursuance of an act of Congress entitled "An act to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin," approved March 3, 1875, and on which judgments and awards no appeal is pending, or on which the time for an appeal has expired, and on which the liability of the Government is established: Provided, however, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be available except on the certificate of the Attorney-General to the Secretary of the Treasury that the liability of the United States is established, and then only in an amount to be by him fixed, not exceeding the amount of the judgment or award.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 376, to insert:

To pay A. W. Bash, on account of expenses of collecting the revenue from customs prior to July 1, 1882, $746.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 380, to insert:

To pay Phelps, Stokes & Co., on account of refunding taxes illegally collected prior to July 1, 1882 (internal revenue), $4,020.36.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 394, to insert:

Fuel, light, water, and miscellaneous items required by the janitors and firemen in the proper care of the buildings, furniture, and heating apparatus, exclusive of personal service, for all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1885, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 410, to insert:

For payment to the credit of the Union Pacific Railway Company (Kansas division) for transportation furnished January 10, 1876, on account of the ethnological exhibit of the Smithsonian Institution at the international exhibition, Philadelphia, 1876, $33.40.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 434, to insert:

For payment of the expenses of the committee of the National Academy of Sciences incurred in preparing answers to inquiries of the joint commission considering the Government surveys, $239.90.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "National Board of Health," after line 450, to insert:

To pay Michael Conlan for services as messenger in the National Board of Health from July 24, 1879.

Mr. HALE. Let that amendment be passed over informally, The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). If there be no objection the amendment will be passed over informally. The next amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations will be announced:

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 454 to line 456, inclusive, as follows:

That all laws and parts of laws authorizing the establishment of the National Board of Health be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for payment of the judgments of the Court of Claims," in line 542, to reduce the appropriations for the claim of Austin Messenger from $5,826 to $2,040.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 544, to increase the appropriation for the claim of "William Roeber" from $2,040 to $5,826.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 552, before the name "Bendel," to strike out "R." and insert "B.;" so as to read:

B. Bendel & Co., $2,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 555, to insert "the initial R." before the name "Rootes;" so as to read:

Thomas R. Rootes, $375.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 575.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the attention of the Senator from Maine for a moment. I ask unanimous consent to insert in this paragraph:

Edward Bradbury, $1,950.

He has obtained, I am informed, a judgment of the Court of Claims for that sum, and the certificate of the court was sent to the committee, but it was overlooked, I suppose.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator inform me whether the time in which an appeal may be taken has expired?

Mr. HOAR. That is covered by the proviso beginning in line 573: Provided, That none of the aforesaid judgments shall be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired.

He will have to wait fifteen months.

Mr. HALE. There are a great many claims where judgments have been rendered. The rule of the committee is to insert only those where the right of appeal has expired. The proviso was put in as a matter of extra precaution, but the rule is not to pay any judgment until the time for taking an appeal has expired.

Mr. HOAR. I was not informed on that point. I shall withdraw the request for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 575, to insert:

To pay Albert Grant for interest at 5 per cent. per annum on judgment of Court of Claims for $14,016.29, from January 17, 1870, the date the original transcript was filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, until paid, a sufficient sum to pay the same, the principal of the judgment having been appropriated for at the last session of Congress.

Mr. JACKSON. Is that amendment open to a question of order? If so, I raise the question of order on it.

Mr. BAYARD. It is a private claim.

Mr. JACKSON. It is a private claim, and never has been considered by any committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON] raises a question of order on the amendment on the ground that it is a private claim.

Mr. JACKSON. It was never considered by any committee, and there is no recommendation from any department to pay it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it be a private claim, the Chair does not hesitate to rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. JACKSON. It certainly is.

Mr. HALE. The Senate Committee on Appropriations does not propose to put any private claims upon the bill. This item was put upon it, being regularly sent by the Secretary of the Treasury in a letter accompanying the documents with the decision of the court, and considerations touching the case, and upon that the committee inserted the item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it to pay a judgment of the Court of Claims?

Mr. HALE. It is to pay a judgment of the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It being to pay a judgment of the Court of Claims, the Chair would hold the amendment to be in order.

Mr. JACKSON. I will explain in what way it is to pay a judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. HALE. It is not like the other judgments, of course.

Mr. JACKSON. No; it is not like the other judgments. The judgment was rendered for the principal in June, 1883. The claimant declined to take the principal unless he was allowed interest, and he is here claiming interest for thirteen years prior to the rendition of the judgment. The question of interest is the only question in the case.

No adjudication has ever been made as to that; there has been no report of any committee made upon it, and there has been no recommendation of any department upon it. I think the amendment is clearly out of order.

Mr. BAYARD. Independent of that, would it not be an entire violation of the rule of the Government in respect to interest? Every other man with a judgment in the Court of Claims loses his interest. That forms a part of the hardship of all appeals from the judgment of the Court of Claims. I have known men whose whole fortunes were hung up in a judgment found in the Court of Claims, and who were kept without interest until an appeal to the Supreme Court could be had, and then, when the judgment was affirmed, not a dollar of interest went with the money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As there is no agreement as to the precise state of facts upon which the opinion of the present occupant of the chair on the question of order would depend, the Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to state the facts in regard to this case as I understand them. In 1867 Albert Grant, the claimant, constructed a public building in Philadelphia by contract with the Government. Certain extra work was required, alterations were made as the construction went along, for which the contractor was to be compensated by extra pay. After the building was completed a controversy arose as to the amount which should be paid the contractor for the extra work and it was adjudicated in the Court of Claims. The contractor claimed $48,000 as extra pay.

The question arose whether he was to be paid $48,000 or $34,000. Testimony was taken and the court adjudicated the claim, and by its minutes rendered a judgment for the amount of $48,000. When the judgment came to be entered on the record, the judge who extended it, by an accident took the wrong bill of items, the wrong aggregate, which amounted to $34,000 instead of that which amounted to $48,000, so that the record by mistake gave the claimant only the smaller sum, and thus the judgment was extended. Thereupon the claimant, finding the judgment thus erroneously entered, and needing the money that was evidenced by the judgment, filed according to law his transcript of the record as it then stood in the Treasury Department before the Comptroller and obtained his $34,000.

As to the law bearing upon the question of interest, I ask the attention of the Senator from Delaware, for this is a very important matter to a man who is not likely to live a great while, and who has had a fifteen years' controversy to get his just dues adjudicated to him. I understand the state of the law to be that where a judgment has been obtained in the Court of Claims in favor of a party, he thereupon filing a transcript of that judgment before the Treasury Department becomes entitled from that date to interest upon the judgment. On January 17, 1870, Mr. Grant filed a transcript of the judgment of the Court of Claims, and received the amount of $34,000. Thereupon he applied to Congress for permission to go to the Court of Claims to re-examine its minutes and records, showing what its decision was intended to be, what its record should have been made. After being bandied about from one House of Congress to another, year after year, with a great many favorable reports, and sometimes the bill passing in one House and not in the other, in the year 1883 an act was finally passed authorizing the Court of Claims to reopen its judgment, and to make it as they originally designed to make it, $48,000.

In accordance with the provisions of that act, early in 1884, I think, the court proceeded to re-examine the case, found all the allegations of Mr. Grant to be as I have stated, and rendered a judgment nunc pro tunc for the balance, $14,000, rendering a judgment as of the date of the original judgment and as verging in and being a part of the original judgment.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the Senator yield to me in that connection?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. JACKSON. The Senator is mistaken about the judgment having been rendered nunc pro tunc. I have it before me. The judgment was rendered just for the $14,000 in June, 1883.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand that to be the way, but supposing it to have been the way of it—

Mr. JACKSON. It is the way.

Mr. BLAIR. The judgment was rendered. All the items are in the report and in the papers as they were before the committees of both Houses of Congress, from year to year, showing that the balance was precisely the sum for which the second judgment was rendered. Thereupon the Attorney-General made his appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. I have here the decision of the Supreme Court, and that I understand to be substantially to the effect that this sum of $14,016.29 was a part, and should have been made a part, of the original judgment, and should have been so recorded. That can not be controverted at all. So the judgment of $14,016.29 is really and truly a part of the original amount adjudicated to be due in the year 1869, and on which Albert Grant was rightfully entitled to interest from the time when he filed his transcript of the original record, which, erroneously made, did not happen to include it, but which should have included it upon the minutes of the court itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from New Hampshire as stating that the judgment of $14,000 was paid?

Mr. BLAIR. I have not stated that as yet. I am coming to that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator allow the Chair—

Mr. BLAIR. I am stating the nature of the $14,000 judgment, that it was to correct an error, a mistake of the court, the agent of the United States, in making up the record of its original finding. By an accident, by a mistake, the court took a list of items, amounting to $34,000, when its own judgment and its own minutes, its own decision, showed that it designed to render a judgment of $48,000. After years of effort in both Houses of Congress, Mr. Grant finally succeeded in getting an act through Congress authorizing the court to correct that mistake, and when the mistake was corrected it was designed to be corrected in such a way as to give him the benefit of his original judgment at the time of the close of the original controversy; that is, $48,000.

Now, to proceed: At the last session, I think, but I am not quite sure, an appropriation to satisfy this judgment was asked for, and it was made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator allow the Chair to inquire as to the precise facts which would control the decision of the Chair upon the question of order? Was the judgment rendered by the court for the $14,000 a balance paid to the claimant, and is this a claim for interest supposed to have accrued before that payment was made?

Mr. BLAIR. The appropriation for the principal was made, but the claimant applying at the Treasury for his money, expecting the interest as a matter of course upon the judgment as from January, 1870, was told by the Treasury officials that it would be unsafe for him to take the principal until the interest itself was in form appropriated for. Therefore he has allowed the principal to remain in the hands of the Treasury Department, and comes here asking for this formal appropriation for the amount of interest; so that no money whatever under the appropriation for the payment of this judgment, either principal or interest, has ever been received by the claimant.

That is the precise fact upon the point in regard to which the Chair asked. The claimant now asks an appropriation covering in direct terms the interest, and expects with the appropriation of the last session and this appropriation for the interest, to get the entire amount due by reason of the mistake made by the court in 1870.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator to state that the appropriation contained in the amendment is to cover interest that is supposed to have accrued upon the principal of the debt?

Mr. BLAIR. Yes, sir; upon this balance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair does not hesitate to rule the amendment to be out of order.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to ask the Chair to state the ground of his decision, because undoubtedly the ruling may be right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the claim is a private claim, and being so it is out of order on this appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not myself understand how that can be the case. The interest is a part of the judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, but it results in a very great injustice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "District of Columbia," after line 584, to insert:

Metropolitan police, contingent expenses: To pay Washington Gas-Light Company, gas for police headquarters, May and June, 1879, $50.85.

Executive office, contingent expenses: To pay the Public Printer for printing and binding three hundred copies of Report of Commissioners for 1881, $341.71.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 607, to insert:

Assessor's office: To pay G. A. Hall the difference between salary as messenger, at $50 per month, and salary as clerk, at $1,200 per annum, from July 1, 1882, to June 1, 1883, eleven months, he having performed the duties of clerk during that time, being for the service of the fiscal year 1883, $550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 615, to insert:

Furniture for new school buildings: To pay J. W. Boteler & Son for furniture for Anlostan school, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1883, $6.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 619, to insert:

Miscellaneous expenses: To pay H. Cowling for use of carriage for Senate Committee on the District of Columbia in visiting charitable and reformatory institutions, being for the service of the fiscal year 1883, $19.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 649, to insert:

To pay F. H. Bates for services as military instructor at the High School, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 653, to reduce the appropriation "for repairs to school buildings, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1884," from $364.17 to $64.17.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 672, to insert:

And any balances of appropriations for the District of Columbia under the head of improvements and repairs for the fiscal year 1885 that remain unexpended June 30, 1885, may be applied to meeting deficiencies in any item of appropriations for the improvement or repair of streets and county roads for the same year.

The amendment was agreed to.

GEORGE E. SPENCER.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I ask that the pending order may be laid aside informally in order that I may call up a resolution on the Calendar which was reported from the Committee on the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know to what the Senator refers; but would it not be better for us to take up such things after the passage of the appropriation bill rather than to do it now?

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. This will only take a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Kansas to interpose an objection?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not want to object, but I have a number of bills here that I should be glad to have taken up.

Mr. HALE. The resolution now called for will involve no debate, I understand.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. It will lead to no debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the appropriation bill may be informally laid aside in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of a resolution reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The resolution will be read for information.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be allowed and paid from the contingent fund of the Senate to George E. Spencer, formerly a Senator from the State of Alabama, the sum of $7,132, being the amount actually and necessarily expended by him in maintaining his title to his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada to lay aside informally the appropriation bill and consider the resolution just read? The Chair hears no objection. The resolution is before the Senate, and the question is on agreeing to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to say that I am opposed to the principle involved in the resolution. It is vicious. In my opinion there is no justice or equity in it. I do not desire now to consume any of the time of the Senate in stating further my opinion in regard to it. The resolution was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "War Department," to strike out the clause from line 741 to line 751, inclusive, as follows:

For payment of taxes upon lots numbered 6 and 7 in square numbered 169, Washington, D. C., assessed prior to July, 1874, including interest and cost of advertising, being for the service of the fiscal year 1885 and prior years, $543.30; and the Attorney-General of the United States is hereby directed to proceed against the warrantors upon the covenants in the conveyance to recover back said sum, in the name of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Quartermaster's Department," to strike out the clause from line 760 to 763, inclusive, as follows:

To pay to Mrs. M. L. Eddins, holder of claim of Meader and Morris for amount found due for Army transportation, 1881 and prior years, $42.90.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out the clause from line 764 to line 769, inclusive, as follows:

To pay William H. Farrell amount of claim allowed under incidental expenses Quartermaster's Department, and reported to Congress in House Executive Document No. 153, page 36, Forty-eighth Congress, second session, $89.90.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 799, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the various expenses of the Quartermaster-General's Department from $15,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 804, to insert:

To John Finn, $2,800, being the purchase-price for mules bought from him in November, 1864, and payable from the appropriations for "Transportation of the Army and its supplies, 1882 and prior years" (fiscal year 1865), which is exhausted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out the following clause from line 812 to line 814, inclusive:

For necessary improvements and construction of quarters for the non-commissioned staff of the Army, $18,079.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "buildings and grounds in and around Washington," after line 821, to insert:

Increasing the water supply of Washington, D. C.: For completing payment for land taken for a reservoir under the act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes, approved July 15, 1882, in addition to a like amount appropriated for the same purpose by act of July 7, 1884, $87,500: Provided, That this appropriation shall be subject to the same provisions and restrictions named in said act of July 15, 1882.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the Signal Service, after line 867, to insert:

Means of transportation, namely: For one horse, to replace one rendered unserviceable since appropriation for present fiscal year was passed, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous objects," after line 912, to insert:

Pay of two and three year volunteers: For payment of arrears of pay, &c., to officers and men who served in the war of the rebellion, which may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, being for the service of the fiscal year 1871 and prior years, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 919, to insert:

Bounty to volunteers and their widows and legal heirs: For payment of amounts of bounty to volunteer soldiers who served in the war of the rebellion, and their widows and legal heirs, which may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, being for the service of the fiscal year 1871 and prior years, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 926, to insert:

Bounty under act of July 28, 1866: For payment of amounts of additional bounty under the act of July 28, 1866, which may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, being for the service of the fiscal year 1880 and prior years, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 933, to insert:

Commutation of rations to prisoners of war and soldiers on furlough: For payment of amounts which may be certified to be due by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department for commutation of rations to prisoners of war in rebel States and soldiers on furlough, being for the service of the fiscal year 1871 and prior years, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," after line 949, to insert:

To pay the Harlan and Hollingsworth Company for the use and occupation of their ship-yard by the ironclad Amphitrite, and the care of said vessel, and expenses to which they were subject for watching and storage of turrets, pilot-houses, guns, &c., from July 8, 1876, to December 29, 1882, $67,987.

Mr. McPHERSON. Before that amendment is voted on I should like to ask the Senator from Maine who has charge of the bill if there was an agreement between the Navy Department and the gentlemen whose names appear in these amendments as to the amount to be paid for the service rendered. It seems to me to be a most extraordinary thing that the United States must pay for three of the iron-clad monitors a sum equivalent to almost $200,000 for the care of those ships in ship-yards. I was not aware that any agreement had been reached between the Navy Department and these gentlemen; and certainly I was not aware that so large a sum had been allowed them. Can the Senator give me the information?

Mr. HALE. The Senator undoubtedly knows that these ironclads remained in the yards of the ship-builders for several years, no appropriations having been made by Congress for continuing the work upon them. They occupied conspicuous places in the yards, and of course were in the way of other business. The contractors had no power to remove them. Finding that Congress did nothing, attention was called to the subject, and the Secretary of the Navy was directed by a resolution, or a clause in an appropriation act, to appoint a commission to consider the whole subject and report what amounts were fairly due the owners of these ship-yards for the use of their property during those years by the Government.

The amounts inserted here by the committee are the amounts reported by that commission, not varying at all in any particular. They are the same amounts which were inserted last year and passed by the Senate, but thrown off in a conference between the two Houses. That is why they are put on this year.

Mr. McPHERSON. Do I understand the Senator to say that a board of naval officers was appointed by the Secretary of the Navy to adjust this claim between the Navy Department and the three different firms named?

Mr. HALE. Not to adjust, because that depends upon Congress giving the money.

Mr. McPHERSON. To recommend?

Mr. HALE. Yes, to fix the amount. In one case at least one of the owners of the yards felt so aggrieved that he declined to take the amount reported and refused in any way to submit his claim to the Navy Department. It was only after much controversy and after the recommendation had been made that the others should be appropriated for, that he came in and agreed to take the amount fixed upon in full provided it should be appropriated.

Mr. McPHERSON. This is a matter with which I suppose I ought to be as familiar as the Senator from Maine, serving on the Committee on Naval Affairs with him, but it has entirely slipped from my recollection. I understand this action to have been taken under the authority of a resolution of Congress directing the Secretary of the Navy to adjust the claims of these gentlemen. Will the Senator inform me still further, because his recollection of the matter is certainly better than my own, what other directions were given to the Secretary of the Navy touching these ships? Were they to be removed from these different navy-yards and stored somewhere, or are they there still subject to the same expense each year that has been laid upon them between the years 1877 and 1882?

Mr. HALE. It is not a very easy matter to remove them. One of them is in California. One of them has been launched and taken around to the navy-yard at Washington for her armor and armament. The others are in yards on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. McPHERSON. This bill only speaks of three, the Amphitrite, the Terror, and the Puritan. As to the one in California the resolution, I believe, did not touch that ship, because it is in the navy-yard in California. As to the Monadnock it was held in possession of the Government and was in the Government yard at the time when the resolution was passed directing the Secretary of the Navy to make the adjustment. But as to the three ships named here, are they still in the yards of Mr. Roach, Mr. Cramp, and the Harlan & Hollingsworth Company?

Mr. HALE. As I have said, two of them are in those yards. The Monadnock has been removed from the private yard where she was to the navy-yard at Mare Island in California. The other two remain, and work has since been done upon them by the contractors under the appropriation of three years ago. If Congress appropriates as is covered in the naval appropriation bill this year as reported by the Senate Committee, it is expected that work will go on and they will be completed. Of course while they are being worked upon and the contractors are spending money upon them, completing them, no charge is made for rent. No charge would have been made undoubtedly had the work gone on from the beginning, but the long delay of years was so burdensome that the owners of the yards felt that they had a claim for rent.

The whole matter was submitted to this commission. I will say to the Senator that I never heard any fault found with the amounts reported except by the owners of the yards. They did complain.

I do not think it is strange that the Senator does not have this item in his mind. I did not get it precisely in the Naval Committee, but more because of my familiarity with the appropriations here and in the other branch years ago. Otherwise I should not have had it in my mind.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Senator will bear with me a moment longer, it seems to me as though there was no intention on the part of Congress to complete these ships, and therefore I did expect that when the committee proposed any legislation touching them they would certainly provide in some way that the Government should take possession of them and take them from these different ship-yard establishments, and place them in their own navy-yards, where, at least, we should not be subject to the annual expense of care and storage. That was the reason why I made the inquiry.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine whether in his opinion these amendments are or are not for the purpose of paying private claims, and if so, whether they are in order under Rule XVI.

Mr. HALE. They are based upon a resolution of Congress directing an investigation to be made, and the items have been regularly sent in by the Department. That has been done for years.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There is another amendment proposed by the committee on page 52. I desire to make the same inquiry in regard to that amendment.

Mr. HALE. When we get to that I shall look it up.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the Senator will turn to that page he will find it beginning in line 1263. My reason for making the inquiry is because I have an amendment myself which I desire to propose, and it seems to me that it stands on the same basis substantially with that amendment.

Mr. HALE. The committee has endeavored not to put any claims upon the bill. If the Senator makes a point of order upon that amendment when we reach it, and the Chair rules it out, of course it is not a thing that I can in any way object to, and I shall not.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not propose to make a point of order upon it, but if it be in order I do not see why the amendment insisted upon by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] was not in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator from Maine give a little more information in regard to the three vessels which are named that have been watched and looked after in the three separate yards? Were these vessels in the course of construction? Were they being built?

Mr. HALE. They had been begun by the Government under contract. When the controversy arose in the year 1877 the Secretary of the Navy gave directions that work should cease. After that they hung there, an interrupted work, nothing being done upon them; there was no expenditure of money upon them by the contractors, but they were using up quite a portion of the yards.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Had the Government commenced to build the vessels?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. In its own yards?

Mr. HALE. No; the Senator does not understand. The Government commenced them by contract in the yards of the ship-yard owners and then suspended work and left the vessels in the yards on the stocks, where they could not be removed, and were so occupied, using up large portions of the yards of the ship-yard owners and contractors without any fault on their part. They were continually beseeching the Government to go on and finish them and get them out of the way.

Mr. McPHERSON. I believe we are acting upon the amendments of the committee at present, and that they will be open to amendment after we get through with the list.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 957, to insert:

To pay William Cramp & Sons for the use and occupation of their ship-yard by the Ironclad Terror, and for care and storage of the turrets, guns, &c., from July 8, 1876, to December 30, 1882, $75,790.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 963, to insert:

To pay John Bosch for the use and occupation of his ship-yard by the Ironclad Puritan, and for the care of said vessel and storage of her turrets, guns, &c., from July 8, 1876, to December 29, 1882, $69,201: Provided, That no moneys hereby appropriated for the above three mentioned ships shall be paid except upon full receipt and discharge of all claims of the parties to whom the same may be paid for care and storage of said vessels, turrets, guns, &c., for use and occupation of these several yards.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "naval establishment," after line 996, to insert:

For payment to the following newspapers for advertising proposals for new steel cruisers for the United States Navy, in May, 1883, namely: Sunday Chronicle, Washington, $99.45; Sunday Herald, Washington, $128.25; National Republican, Washington, $184.50; in all, $412.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1021, to insert:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers on account of actual expenses, being for the service of the fiscal year 1883, $1,680.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1096, to insert:

For payment to Lieut. W. H. Jaques, United States Navy, for actual and necessary expenses incurred in obtaining information while performing the duties as secretary to the gun-foundry board organized by the President in accordance with the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, $180.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Interior Department," after line 1104, to insert:

For reconstructing Interior Department (heating apparatus), $18,849.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1107, to insert:

To pay amount found due by the accounting officers to the Central Pacific Railroad Company on account of contingent expenses General Land Office, being a deficiency on account of the fiscal year 1883, $43.80.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "public lands service," in line 1124, to increase the appropriations "for incidental expenses of the several land offices" from $25,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1124, to insert:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers on account of contingent expenses of land offices, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1883, $62.28.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1128, to insert:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers on account of depredations on public timber, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1883, $1,641.87.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. The Senate passed over in consequence of my momentary absence an amendment proposed by the committee to strike out certain language on page 11. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine to consent to go back to that amendment now, because the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER] who knows something about it is unwell and desires to leave the Chamber. He does not wish to stay very long. Therefore I should like to go back to it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to going back on the request of the Senator from Massachusetts to page 11? The Chair understands that that amendment was passed over informally. If there be no objection the Senate will consider the proposed amendment now. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out from line 237 to line 253 in the following words:

And all suits or proceedings pending in the district courts of Dakota and Washington Territories at the time of the passage of said act, and which would, if instituted after the passage of said act, be required to be brought in the new districts created and provided for in said act, may be transferred by consent of parties to said new district courts, and there disposed of in like manner and with like effect as if the same had been there instituted; and all writs and recognizances relating to such suits and proceedings so transferred shall be considered as belonging to the courts of the said new districts respectively in the same manner and with like effect as if they had issued or had been taken in reference thereto originally; and the counties of Skamania and Spokane, in said Washington Territory, shall constitute part of the fourth judicial district thereof until the Legislature shall meet and otherwise provide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. HOAR. My knowledge of this subject comes very largely from a communication made to me by the chief-justice of Washington Territory, who is a very able and excellent lawyer, and who is a relative of mine, for whose statements I am quite willing to vouch. Technically this clause comes within the principle which the Committee on Appropriations have applied, with the assent of the Senate; it is certainly barely over that line; but I think if the Senator from Maine will hear the statement which I will take but half a minute to make he will be willing to retain the provision for the present.

We passed last year an act for the redistricting of Washington Territory, and by a mistake which was made in the House, not in the Senate, two of the counties, the county of Spokane and the county of Skamania, were left not in any jurisdiction of any court, and the inhabitants of those counties are without judicial protection unless this paragraph can be enacted. As we are providing generally for the expenses of the justices and for the judicial expenses of the Territories, there would seem to be no harm under the circumstances in letting this go in.

That relates to the last clause in the paragraph. In regard to the other part of it I will state that these Territories, by the rapid growth of population and the filling up in certain counties, have got into a condition where for ordinary purposes of justice the inhabitants in some counties were obliged to travel more than two hundred miles to get justice, and that was corrected by a new judicial distribution. The new judicial distribution has created courts which have very small business at first. The old courts are crowded, and the inhabitants of some of those counties have to travel a long distance to the courts, which are overcrowded with work in places, instead of being able to go with their neighbors and with all the persons whose cases arise at present to courts in their own neighborhood.

This paragraph merely provides that where both parties agree they may transfer a case from the court under the old arrangement to the court under the new. Both the Oregon Senators are generally familiar with the condition of this matter so far as it relates to Washington Territory, and the Delegates of both these Territories are very earnest to have this done. I hope, therefore, that the honorable Senator from Maine will allow the paragraph to stand in the bill without a contest.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Massachusetts knows "a hawk from a handsaw" as plainly as any man in the Senate. He must see clearly that this is a pure piece of legislation. It is an elaborate and well-devised plan relating to the judiciary of Dakota and Washington Territories. It has no more to do with a deficiency appropriation bill providing for defects in appropriations for the current fiscal year than it would have to do with an appropriation for furniture in the Senate Chamber. It is a clear exercise on the part of the House of their undoubted right, under their rules, to put legislation on an appropriation bill. I do not raise any question as to its being good legislation.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, it is a good deal less than what he states in one particular. It is not a well-devised scheme of new legislation. It is merely the correction in the first particular of a slight error, a slight imperfection, which works great injustice in some localities in general legislation, which passed both Houses last year.

Mr. HALE. It is a pure piece of legislation which should have been considered either by the Committee on Territories or the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR. It has been so considered.

Mr. HALE. Quite likely it is wise legislation. I am bound to accept what the Senator from Massachusetts has said; I believe I fully concur with him as to the need of it; but I repeat it has nothing whatever to do with a deficiency appropriation bill. It is for the Senate to settle the question, and if the Senate desires to keep this piece of legislation upon the deficiency appropriation bill I shall lose no sleep about it. A vote can be very readily taken and settle it at once. I do not care to say anything more about it.

Mr. SLATER. I will say just a word in regard to this clause. In the act referred to in the paragraph preceding that which is proposed to be stricken out by the committee, a mistake crept in by which two new counties in Washington Territory were left out. The people of those counties are entirely without judicial process. They are not able to go into court in civil matters or in criminal matters. This paragraph which the committee report to strike out is the only hope they have of being relieved from that condition. That being the case, although it is a pure piece of general legislation, I trust that the Senate will refuse to strike out the clause. It is very important to those people. Many crimes are being committed there for which there is no remedy and no means of prosecuting them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the paragraph in question.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will return to line 1134.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out the clause from line 1171 to line 1175, inclusive, as follows:

For payment of amount found due to McBroome and Taylor for surveying private land claims in New Mexico, being a deficiency for 1881 and prior years, $208.53.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerks are uncertain. The bill has pencil marks striking out what follows line 1175.

Mr. HALE. I called the attention of the Secretary to that. The next paragraph is to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out from line 1176 to line 1210, inclusive, in the following words:

Tenth Census:

That the office of the Tenth Census is hereby abolished, and the terms of office of the Superintendent and of all employees appointed under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1879, entitled "An act to provide for the taking of the tenth and subsequent censuses," or of any subsequent act relating to the Tenth Census, shall cease and terminate from the date of the passage of this act; and no further expenditures, whether for salaries or expenses, shall be made on account of the Tenth Census, except as hereinafter provided. The unfinished work of the Tenth Census shall be completed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, to whom the records and other property of the Census Office shall be transferred; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to appoint, from the date of the passage of this act, and for the term of one year from date of such appointments, a clerical force for duty in said division, which force shall consist of one clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3, who shall also be a practical printer; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; and one copyist, at $900 per annum; and for payment of the salaries of such force the sum of $6,900, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated; and any balances of appropriations for the Tenth Census heretofore made which shall remain unexpended at the date of the passage of this act shall be applied to the liquidation of any liabilities for the work of the Tenth Census which have been incurred heretofore and remain unpaid at such date; but this provision shall not apply to any unexpended balance of the appropriation for printing the report of the Tenth Census made by act of August 7, 1882, but such balance shall be applied as provided in that act.

The foregoing provisions relating to the Tenth Census shall take effect from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1214, to insert:

To pay Miss Emma Dowell for clerical services rendered in the Interior Department in July, 1882, $29.35.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; that it had occurred in the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, and 6 to the said bill, and that it further insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the said bill numbered 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20; that it asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that it had appointed Mr. R. W. TOWNSHEND of Illinois, Mr. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN of Indiana, and Mr. R. G. HORR of Michigan managers at the further conference on its part.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Indian affairs," after line 1262, to insert:

For amount due to Isaac G. Baker for one hundred and sixty-two head of beef-cattle taken by Fort Peck Indians October 14, 1878, while in process of delivery under his contract dated June 21, 1878, $5,820.20.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine having charge of this bill how this amendment comes into the bill? It appears on the face of the amendment to be provision for payment for an Indian depredation. At the last session of Congress I introduced a bill to provide for a commission to audit such claims of citizens of Oregon and the adjacent Territories, and I understand that the committees have uniformly reported against the payment of such claims. I should like to ask if the amount of this claim has been ascertained by the judgment of any court, or audited by any officer of the Government under any authority of Congress?

Mr. HALE. In some of these cases it is pretty difficult to tell whether the transmission to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury or the heads of Departments makes them technically estimates. In some cases the Secretary sends in terms just as much an estimate as there is in the Book of Estimates, recommends the appropriation, and it is referred to the Committee on Appropriations and is considered by the committee as an estimate under the rules, and therefore not subject to the point of order. In other cases the Secretary will transmit the papers with a favorable recommendation, and there are variations and shades and degrees about that. The committee thought that in its spirit this came under the head of a matter that was considered and determined upon favorably by the head of a Department, and so recommended it and put it in; but if the Senator makes a point of order and the amendment is ruled out, the Committee on Appropriations would consider hereafter that it would not be authorized to put in such a provision.

Mr. DOLPH. I will state to the Senator that I offered and had printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations an amendment to provide one appropriation for the payment of the claims which had been audited and settled under the act of August 7, 1882, which the committee did not see fit to adopt.

Mr. HALE. Was it transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. DOLPH. The estimate was transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, with an estimate, and I proposed to offer it in the proper place, but I can not find that this claim for Indian depredations was audited at all. I ask unanimous consent that this may be passed over until after the reading of the bill is concluded; and I will offer my amendment in connection with this to come in on this page, and meanwhile I will see if there is any estimate for it.

Mr. HALE. To that I have no objection, or the Senate may strike out the item if it pleases.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not make any point of order, but ask that the amendment may be passed over to be considered in connection with one I shall offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1269, to insert:

For amount due to the Globe Printing Company, of Saint Louis, Mo., for advertising for proposals for Indian supplies and stock-cattle in March and April, 1884, as per certificate of Second Comptroller, December 22, 1884, being for the service of the fiscal year 1884, $197.34.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1277, to insert:

To reimburse the Creek Nation for liabilities incurred in defraying the expenses of its delegation while engaged in negotiating the treaty of 1862, so much of their funds erroneously used to pay expenses of taking a census in 1868, not exceeding the sum of $1,482, is hereby reapportioned from the amount of $1,944.64 of the appropriation provided for taking said census carried to the surplus fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1287, to insert:

To enable the accounting officers to adjust certain appropriations on the books of the Department, the sum of $723.77 is hereby reapportioned: $628.77 thereof to be carried to the credit of the appropriation "fulfilling treaties with Creeks, proceeds of lands," and $95.00 to "payment to certain Creek Indians for individual reserves sold, and so forth," being amounts found due these appropriations in the adjustment of the accounts of W. H. Garrett, late Indian agent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1298, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the heirs of certain Osage Indians, killed while on a hunt on Medicine Lodge Creek, in 1873, the balance on hand of the sum of $5,000 appropriated by act approved March 3, 1877, "to reimburse the Osages for losses sustained, and in accordance with pledges by their agent," amounting to $2,451.50, which is hereby reapportioned for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Before proceeding further with the bill I desire to ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment at this point, as I am called away for an hour or more, and can not be present perhaps when the committee amendments are concluded. The amendment can now be offered by unanimous consent, I understand.

Mr. HALE. Let us hear what it is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. After line 1349 it is proposed to add:

For the completion of the pedestal for the statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, to be erected on Bedloe's Island, in New York Harbor, $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the officers of the organization which has charge of the erection of said pedestal and statue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from New York offering this amendment at this stage of the proceeding?

Mr. HALE. I do not object to its being offered now, but I must raise the point of order on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the Senator from New York proposing his amendment at this time.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It is entirely useless for me to offer the amendment if the point of order is raised. I have talked with all the members of the committee and a large number of Senators, and I think that after a two or three minutes' statement the amendment will not be objected to. I understand very well that it can not go on if the point of order is insisted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine object to the amendment?

Mr. HALE. I withhold the point of order until the Senator makes his statement.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It has been generally supposed that the erection of the pedestal of this statue was a matter belonging entirely to New York or the citizens of the State of New York. This is a mistaken view of the situation. The people of France as a whole have made the gift of the statue, here described as the statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, to the people of the United States as a memorial of one hundred years of our history as a Government. That has been accepted by the people of the United States through an act of Congress. Nothing has ever been done by the State of New York or by the people of the city of New York officially in connection with this thing.

All the proceedings heretofore have been through the Congress of the United States. For this purpose an act of Congress was passed naming the place where this statue should be erected. Congress might have brought it here to Washington or have sent it to Philadelphia or to San Francisco or to any other point; but by an act of Congress it was decided that it should be erected upon a Government island in the harbor of New York. I will read the resolution of Congress:

Whereas the President has communicated to Congress the information that citizens of the French Republic propose to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of our independence by erecting, at their own cost, a colossal statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, upon a pedestal of suitable proportions, to be built by private subscription, upon one of the islands belonging to the United States in the harbor of New York; and

Whereas it is proper to provide for the care and preservation of this grand monument of art, and of the abiding friendship of our ancient ally: Therefore, Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept the colossal statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, when presented by citizens of the French Republic, and to designate and set apart for the erection thereof a suitable site upon either Governor's or Bedloe's Island, in the harbor of New York; and upon the completion thereof shall cause the same to be inaugurated with such ceremonies as will serve to testify the gratitude of our people for this expressive and felicitous memorial of the sympathy of the citizens of our sister republic; and he is hereby authorized to cause suitable regulations to be made for its future maintenance as a beacon, and for the permanent care and preservation thereof as a monument of art and of the continued good-will of the great nation which aided us in our struggle for freedom.

In pursuance of this joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress General Sherman was designated by the President to make a selection, and he made the selection of Bedloe's Island in the harbor of New York, and upon that island, by voluntary subscriptions, there has been expended up to the present time $160,000 in laying the foundation for this pedestal. This amount of money has now been expended, and the work has been brought to a point where the pedestal is but begun. It is estimated that it will cost $130,000 to erect the pedestal upon this foundation. It is impossible by voluntary contributions or subscriptions to raise the necessary amount for the completion of this great work, but it is believed by citizens of the city of New York that if the Government will appropriate $100,000 the additional $30,000 necessary can be raised, and that the work can go on. A number of leading citizens of the State of New York have formed an organization for this purpose, and they have been diligently at work for several years in raising money for this purpose, and, as I have already stated, they have raised and expended $160,000.

This work was entirely voluntary. We had a perfect right in New York, and the whole country had, to call upon the Government of the United States to pay the entire expense. It is a governmental affair. The Congress of the United States has accepted this gift from the Republic of France, and it has already ordered a ship of war to go to France and bring out this statue. It is to be brought out in May next. When it arrives here, unless this money shall be granted, it will of necessity go into store somewhere and remain there for years unless the Government shall appropriate this money. The people of New York city feel that they have done their full share and more than their full share in thus raising $160,000. I might go on and read the report which has been made by the Committee on the Library of the House, but it is not necessary to do so. This matter has been fully considered by the Committee on the Library both in the House and in the Senate, and they have reported a joint resolution, and they have hoped to secure a hearing for it in the House of Representatives and secure its passage, but the condition of business for the past few days has been such as to prevent any possibility of reaching the resolution in the House.

There is no other parliamentary way left, with which I am at all cognizant, by which it may be reached except, by unanimous consent, putting it on this bill. I appeal to the entire Senate to withhold all objection and to allow this to go upon the bill. Certainly the demand of the people of New York that this shall be done is proper and just, and I think that with the law on its side it has still higher claims upon us than the New Orleans Exposition had for calling for another appropriation of $400,000; but for one I believe that it was just and proper that Congress should carry that out. Now, shall we appeal to the Government to give $100,000 to complete this great statue? Certainly it will be nothing less than a national disgrace if it shall so happen that after Congress has passed a law accepting this statue from the Government and people of France it shall fail to provide any just and proper place for its erection. One hundred and sixty thousand dollars has already been expended. The association in New York undertakes to raise $30,000 more, and with the $100,000 asked for here the work can be completed, and when completed it will be one of the greatest works of art in the world. The entire height, base, pedestal, and statue, will be over three hundred feet.

I feel that nothing more is necessary to be said on my part. The chairman of the Library Committee, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], is present and can state, if it should be necessary, still further reasons in this direction. I believe that this appeals to the proper feelings of all Senators and that there certainly can be no objection to the proposition. If there is any objection in the House, that will arise in the conference committee, and it can there be cared for. There is no other possible way of reaching it.

Mr. HALE. It is not a pleasant thing to object to the appropriation of money for an object of this kind that appeals to good taste and to the imagination, and, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] suggests, to patriotism perhaps; but there is a duty that rests upon any one in charge of an appropriation bill, to keep from it, if possible, by invoking points of order, appropriations that have not been fully considered by the Committee on Appropriations for subjects-matter that are not properly considered on appropriation bills and which ought to be considered by other committees.

We are now in the last twenty-four hours of this session of Congress, of this entire Congress, and all the time up to now for two years has been at the disposal of the Committee on the Library or any other committee properly having jurisdiction of this subject to report a bill giving this money, to put it through the two Houses, and let the country make a gift of this large amount of money for the purpose indicated by the Senator from New York; but it is not a proper thing for a deficiency appropriation bill to be put on in these last waning hours. However good it may be, it is a clear case of an enterprise begun without any expectation of calling upon the Government, and when at last it drags and lags refuge is taken in a call upon the Treasury.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I appeal to the Senator to allow me to interrupt him at that point.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am very certain the Senator could not seriously make the statement which he now makes if he had at all considered this measure. It was never a matter of private enterprise. It was never undertaken or projected in any way by the people of the State of New York. Congress, acting independently and by itself and without any consultation or communication with any official in New York, in the city or in the State, decided to accept this statue from the people of France, and by an act of Congress, which I have read, it decided to locate it upon Bedloe's Island in the harbor of New York. A number of patriotic citizens there undertook to raise by voluntary subscription sufficient money to build a proper pedestal for it. They have been laboring earnestly in that direction for two years.

The Committee on the Library have not acted upon it at all this session, because it was still hoped that some large-minded philanthropist would come forward and pay the whole sum that was necessary to do this work; but thus far it has not been done. But this committee of citizens in New York has by voluntary subscriptions raised $160,000. There was no necessity, in my judgment, there was never any duty or obligation upon any committee in New York, to raise a single dollar. The Government of the United States having accepted this statue from the people of France should have provided a proper base or pedestal for it out of the public Treasury, but the people of New York undertook to do it. They have gone thus far; and now it is in such a condition that if this money is not granted, and if the pedestal should not be completed by the time the statue will arrive from France, it must necessarily go into some storehouse and lie there until the Government shall provide for it.

As to putting the amendment upon this bill, I understand full well that it is out of order; but if my attention had been called to it three or four days ago I should have taken the proper means to have made it in order.

The committee in New York were operating with the committee of the House of Representatives. They thought they could there succeed and get it through. It has been reported favorably in the House. I have no doubt that it will pass there almost unanimously, if it can be reached. I have no doubt also that if the question could be brought up separately in this body it would receive almost a unanimous vote here. But my attention was only called to-day to it, and to its condition. There is no possible way of reaching it except the way now proposed; that is, by unanimous consent; and certainly if it is not done now, the demand will come again at the next session, and again and again until the Government will finally do it. Shall the people of the State of New York say to the people of France, "We have accepted from you the most wonderful statue ever erected by the hand of man," and when it arrives in our country, after a notice of two or three years that it is coming, then will Congress say, "We will not even grant the paltry sum of money necessary to erect a pedestal on which to place it?"

This is to be when erected one of the wonders of the world. The bronze statue of the Goddess of Liberty Enlightening the World placed on the pedestal on Bedloe's Island will be over three hundred feet high.

I trust the Chairman of the Committee on the Library will feel called upon to say a few words in regard to this, because he has had this matter before him; it is no new matter to him. The amendment ought to have been reported here in a proper way so as to have made it in order; and if it had been so reported and had been in order, I have no doubt that more than three-fourths of the Senators would have gladly voted for it. I appeal to the Senator from Maine who has this bill in charge to listen to the Chairman of the Library Committee, and then to finally withhold his objection and permit the Senate to vote upon the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I supposed myself that this had been provided for, and I am surprised to find the condition in which this proposed appropriation now is. The only point of order that can be made against it is that one day's notice has not been given to the Committee on Appropriations; but the Chair knows very well that this bill really is now being acted on by unanimous consent. It is only by unanimous consent that it can be read the third time to-day. It can not be read twice on the same day except by unanimous consent, and the gentleman having charge of this bill must know that the only objection that can be made against this amendment is the fact that one day's notice of it has not been given to the Committee on Appropriations. But this subject is matter of public notoriety. It has been acted on by a committee; it is reported by a committee; it is pending in the House on the report of a committee. It seems to me, therefore, that it is pretty hard to have this item ruled out upon an objection that can be taken to the whole bill. We went through the form of an adjournment a few hours ago merely to get this bill up in order to give it a chance to be passed to-day. I think the Senator from Maine would not be violating his duty if he would allow this to pass sub silentio, if the Senator is willing. If a majority of the Senate is not clearly in favor of it, I would not be for putting it on the bill. I do not see why it has not been put on before in the House, as there is a general sentiment in favor of it.

As to the propriety of the Government of the United States paying this sum there is not the slightest doubt in my mind. This is a great work of art, not for the city of New York, but it is an act of patriotism, an act of friendly feeling for a great and powerful Republic. The French and American Republics are akin to each other and have many ties binding them together, and this kindly feeling has been expressly emphasized and very properly emphasized by the gift of the people of France of this beautiful work of art, and all that is requested of us is that we find a suitable location for it. The Government of the United States did that. They accepted this gift by a formal act of Congress. They designated the chief military officer of the country to go and select a site for it. That officer did, with the approval of Congress, select a site in the harbor of New York, a little island that there stands in the midst of that great harbor. And the citizens of New York have contributed more than one-half the expense of the foundation; and shall we not complete it?

I supposed myself that this had already been provided for. There was no doubt about it in the Committee on the Library. We believed that it was the duty of the Government to do something—after having accepted the gift to at least receive it and give it a place. Therefore I hope the Senator from Maine will allow the vote to be taken by the Senate; and if the Senate does not by two-thirds or more vote to put it on, I would not ask to put it on, but it ought to be put on now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the point of order is made against the amendment?

Mr. HALE. After these appeals and invocations I give it up. I will withdraw the point of order and let the Senate vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Post-Office Department," after line 1369, to insert:

Mr. BROWN. That is a just claim, but I understand it is included in another item where several other claims of like character are grouped together. That being the case, I have no objection to its being stricken out here.

Mr. COCKRELL. That claim is included in the provision in section 2, from lines 115 to 117:

For support of prisoners, United States courts, 1882 and prior years, $3,674.59.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 1581.

Mr. PLUMB. I say to the Senator from Maine having this bill in charge that the sundry civil bill contains a provision for the expenditure of a sum of money out of the money charged to the Patent Office, and I think an exception ought to be made in this paragraph about the New Orleans Exposition in favor of that appropriation.

Mr. HALE. I have on my desk an amendment covering the point raised by the Senator from Kansas, which I propose to offer after the first reading of the bill has been finished. It will settle what the Senator from Kansas desires.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1717, after the words "enable the," to insert "Secretary of the Senate and the;" and in line 1719, before the words "House of Representatives," to insert "Senate and;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives borne on the annual and session rolls on the 3d day of March, 1885, one month's extra pay at the compensation then paid them by law, which sums shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out of line 1730 the words "annual and" where they occur, so that the month's pay will only apply to the session employees and not to the annual employees.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator to let this go until we get through with the reading of the bill, as I have an amendment to offer to the clause that will bring up this question.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1740, to insert:

To pay Willis H. Allen, assistant clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means, for additional compensation, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

So as to make the clause read:
For pay of the Navy, prior to July 1, 1881, $21,833.68.

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill is concluded, and the printed amendments of the Committee on Appropriations are disposed of.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 84, at the end of line 289 of section 2, is an estimate of deficiencies sent in by the Treasury Department. There is a supplemental document to House Executive Document No. 153, which has been put in, but the committee did not have it until this morning. It was first sent to the Committee on Claims by mistake.

It is Senate Executive Document No. 101, Forty-eighth Congress, second session, being a letter from the Secretary transmitting a supplemental bill of claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under the act of March 3, 1849, for horses lost in the service. I move the following amendment to cover that estimate, to come in on page 84 after line 289 of section 2:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the claims allowed by the Third Auditor and Second Comptroller under the act of March 3, 1849, for horses and other property lost in the military service, as reported in Senate Executive Document No. 101, Forty-eighth Congress, second session, by the Secretary of the Treasury, $10,486.35.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HALE. There are one or two matters that I wish to propose. On page 64, line 1564 of section 1, after the word "law," I move to insert "for professional services in the above case."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HALE. On the next page, 65, in line 1581, at the end of the line—I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas, as this amendment is to meet a suggestion made by him—I move, after the word "Department," to insert:

Subject to the provisions affecting the same in the sundry civil appropriation bill passed at this session.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HALE. On page 39, at the end of line 940, I move to insert:
The salaries and traveling expenses of the Mississippi River Commission, and for salaries and traveling expenses of assistant engineers under them, and for office expenses and contingencies, $50,000.

Mr. McMILLAN. For what year is that? Is that a deficiency?

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. McMILLAN. What is the item for?

Mr. HALE. For the next fiscal year. They are cared for, under the appropriation now operating for the present year, until July.

Mr. McMILLAN. There is some legislation about to take place in the river and harbor bill, if passed, that may affect them.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator thinks the river and harbor bill is likely to go through—

Mr. McMILLAN. I think certainly it will, of course.

Mr. HALE. Then I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HALE. Now on page 71, line 1721, after the words "1885," I move to insert, "including the Capitol police." That will make the item conform to the bill of last year.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to object to the application of this principle of a month's extra pay to the annual employes of this body; and I think perhaps we ought to settle that question before the amendment of the Senator from Maine is voted upon, because if the motion I make shall prevail his amendment will require to be stricken out. I agree that if we pay the annual employes a month's extra pay we ought to include the Capitol police; but I think we ought not to pay any of them an extra month's pay. If I can have the attention of the Senator from Maine for a moment I will suggest to him that he withhold his amendment until the vote is taken on the amendment I propose in line 1720, for the reason that if my motion prevails his will then have to be stricken out as being against the sense of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. What does the Senator propose?

Mr. PLUMB. I propose to strike out the words "annual and" before the word "session," in line 1720. If the Senate strikes those words out, then the insertion of the words the Senator proposes will be unnecessary. If they are not stricken out the Capitol police ought to be included.

Mr. HALE. I think the Capitol police are on the annual roll.

Mr. PLUMB. They are.

Mr. HALE. Then the Senator's amendment should come first, and I will withdraw mine for the present.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out in line 1720 the words "annual and."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In line 1720, before the word "session," it is proposed to strike out "annual and;" so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employes of the Senate and House of Representatives borne on the session rolls on the 3d day of March, 1885, one month's extra pay at the compensation then paid them by law, which sums shall be immediately available.

Mr. PLUMB. The facts are that many of these employes render about four or five or six months' service in a year. They are already paid a very large sum for the service they render as compared with any persons not in Government employment. They render good service unquestionably; but it seems to me to be wrong to take these people who are paid annual salaries of large sums and give them a month's extra pay. There is some reason for giving it to a Government employe who comes here from a distant part of the country for three months at a short session and five or six at a long session, who has to go back in the interregnum and have no pay during the time he is absent; but to give it to people whose pay goes on all the time, to the Secretary of the Senate whom we pay about $5,000 a year, and the Sergeant-at-Arms and all the officials to whom we pay large sums, seems to me to be a wrong application of the public money.

I think we might as well draw the line here as anywhere. We are of course under certain obligations to these people around us all the time who render valuable services and whose relations are agreeable, and we may feel called upon to do this as a gracious thing; but we should remember that we are not taking the money out of our own pockets. We ought to have some consideration for the public Treasury, which ought not to be raided in this way.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator from Kansas is right. The committee took the provision as the House had prepared it, and also following the bill of last year, which covered both the session and the annual employes; but I think the considerations that are presented by the Senator from Kansas have great force, and I do not oppose his amendment.

Mr. FRYE. Is not there a little difficulty even with that amendment if it should be adopted?

Mr. PLUMB. We can perfect the section further whenever the Senate adopts the principle.

Mr. FRYE. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that there are some six or eight committee clerks who are not annual, and yet, by reason of the committees having been allowed by resolution to continue, they practically become annual.

Mr. PLUMB. I understand that, and I think there might be some other modification of the section; but the principle I am striving for is embodied in the amendment which I have proposed. If the Senate will adopt that we can adjust the provision to the facts of the case, I think.

Mr. HARRISON. The proposition of the Senator from Kansas is very plainly right. Where a clerk is paid by the year for twelve full months when he is certainly not engaged in general about his committee-work more than ten months in two years, or not half the time, the proposition to put him on the same level with the session clerks and employes who come here from distant homes, perhaps to serve three months, is not just. They have the expense of coming here and the expense of returning home at the end of three months. There seems to be a very plausible reason why that class of clerks should have some extra compensation, especially at the short session; but the reason does not apply at all to those who are on the annual roll of the Senate. There is no reason why clerks who are not employed more than half the time about their official duties should have thirteen months' pay in the year given to them. The suggestion of the Senator from Kansas is eminently right. Last night, through the Committee on Contingent Expenses, three of the clerks of committees who were proposed to be made annual but were not made so, were, by order of the Senate constituting those committees to continue during the vacation, practically made annual. So the clerks of those committees will be drawing $6 a day for every day of the vacation. I think that also ought to be guarded against.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend by inserting after line 1743—

Mr. McMILLAN. Is the amendment from the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair supposed it was.

Mr. PLUMB. No; not from the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas offers an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 72, after line 1743, it is proposed to insert:

To pay Fred C. Peck additional compensation for services rendered the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives during the present session of Congress, $200.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state that I offer the amendment at the request of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House, who say that their clerk is only a session employe and by reason of the condition of the work he has been obliged to do a larger amount than usual, and they have unanimously asked that this be inserted in this bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Why did not the House provide for it?

Mr. PLUMB. They state in regard to that that the manner of passing the bill over there was so mysterious that they did not succeed either in getting a sight at the bill nor at the Committee on Appropriations in considering it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I offer the following amendment to come in after line 758 on page 32:

To pay Albert H. Emery, of the city and State of New York, in full settlement of all claims, legal or equitable, which he has in any way against the United States on account of the cost of, and the time spent by him, and use of all patents and inventions in designing and constructing the testing-machine built and erected by him for the United States, or otherwise in any way on account of said machine, the sum of $200,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum is hereby appropriated and made immediately available therefor. Said machine, together with the full right to the use therein of all patents and inventions used in its design and construction, shall belong to the United States.

Mr. HALE. I must make the point of order, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine objects and raises the point of order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Under what provision of Rule XVI is the point of order made?

Mr. SHERMAN and others. It is a private claim.

Mr. HALE. The committee examined this matter and, while they had a great deal of sympathy with this case, were clearly of opinion that it was a private claim. I do not suppose the Senator himself will claim that it is otherwise.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I observe that other private claims have been put on this bill, and some have been put on by the committee. I called the attention of the Senator from Maine to one private claim.

Mr. HALE. I am glad the Senator speaks of that, for I looked afterward to the papers and found that, instead of being a claim, it was a regular estimate sent in by the Secretary of the Treasury asking for an appropriation as a part of the regular estimates.

Now, I do not know of a single private claim that the committee has put upon this bill; but, as I said a little while ago, it is pretty difficult at times to draw the line exactly as to where communications from Departments make a case come under what is called an estimate, and, therefore, bring it within our rules; and the committee may err at times and places in that regard, because it is hard to find just the point where this rule applies.

This case was looked upon as a clear and undoubted claim. These pressures come every year upon the committee to put meritorious claims, if they are meritorious, upon the bill, and the committee strives to keep them off and strives in one direction. It certainly has not any partiality. If it has any in this case it is in favor of the claim.

Mr. HOAR. I hope if the objection can be waived in this case, or if it be a question of doubt with the Senator from Maine, the doubt will be resolved in favor of the claim.

Mr. HALE. I did not mean to intimate that there was any doubt. I think it is a clear case.

Mr. HOAR. I am not sure about that. Here is one of the great debts and obligations of the Government to a great public benefactor, who has done one of the most important public services that in a civil way could be rendered to the country and to the age. His invention is of great importance.

Mr. VOORHEES. May I inquire of the Senator from Maine whether it is not true that there are a number of individual payments provided for in this bill, as much so as this would be? Unless I am mistaken there are payments provided for claimants, or whatever you please to call them, those who have claims against the Government.

Mr. HALE. There are hundreds of individual matters upon this bill, but they are sent in by the Departments after the accounts have been considered and audited by the proper auditing officers, and have become therefore established as a debt against the Government, and are transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury under estimates for appropriations. This is nothing of that kind.

Mr. VOORHEES. I beg pardon. This has been estimated for heretofore. It has been sent here from a Department; it has been reported upon by a committee of this body and referred to the Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Claims. I never knew a claim to have a higher standing so far as its sources are concerned.

Mr. HOAR. Here is an item which catches my eye now, put on by the committee of their own motion:

To pay Rider Henry and John J. Coughlin for services rendered in the Clerk's document-room, $242.50 each; in all, $485.

If that should be put on for a service rendered at the request of one of the branches of Congress, why should not compensation be made to a man who, at the urgent request of one of the Departments of this Government, invented a machine which has produced such wonderful results?

Mr. HALE. Matters touching employes about the two Houses of course do not come under the rule about estimates from the Departments; they are never considered as coming under that rule.

Mr. HOAR. There is not an estimate in this case.

Mr. HALE. But it is not submitted as an estimate for an appropriation.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of the Chairman of the Committee on Claims whether this claim has ever passed the Senate, and, if so, how many times?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It has passed the Senate twice at least; I think three times.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; twice.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It has been favorably reported twice in the House, but has never been reached in that body.

Mr. PLATT. I saw the Senator having charge of this bill yield to the manifest desire of the Senate a little while ago to appropriate $130,000 for the purpose of erecting a pedestal for a statue of Liberty Enlightening the World in the harbor of New York; and I think if he did that, he might yield for this very just claim to be paid.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I called the attention of the Senator from Maine to an amendment put into the bill by the Committee on Appropriations on page 52. The provision of Rule XVI under which the amendment I offer is claimed to be subject to a point of order is paragraph 4:

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provis-tions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Now, whether or not the amendment on page 52 is, in the language of the rule, made "to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation" we do not know. If it be, then it is subject to a point of order, because it does not appear upon the face of the amendment that it is made to carry out an existing law or a treaty stipulation. Now, what, if anything, has the Senator from Maine to say to that?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would rather leave the question to the Senate, whether this amendment is in order or not, finding differing opinions upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have been listening to hear some Senator say that this was in order, that it was not a private claim.

Mr. HALE. Nobody has claimed that it is in order. Nobody doubts that it is a private claim, except perhaps the Chair.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. This is certainly a private claim, and the Chair supposes under that provision of the rule it is out of order.

Mr. CULLOM. I offer an amendment to the bill, coming in after the end of the one hundred and sixty-seventh line, on the eighth page.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate take a recess from 6 to 8 o'clock, as we shall undoubtedly be up all night.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the Senator from Iowa not to make an iron rule about a recess, because if we were within five or ten minutes of finishing this bill it would be of great importance to gain the two hours of the recess. I think we shall finish the bill before 6 o'clock, and I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the motion at present.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] will be read.

THE CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is to add after line 167:

For old custom-house, Saint Louis, Mo., paving Third street front, $1,041.74.

For paving Olive street front, $346.49.

For paving and curbing street on north front of the court-house and post-offices at Springfield, Ill., $370.85.

For paving Halsted street adjacent to marine hospital in Lakeview, Ill., $251.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to offer an amendment to be inserted after line 1633. It was submitted and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but in the hurry of the discharge of their duties it was overlooked. It is recommended by the Sergeant-at-Arms, just as in the case of the other employes similarly situated.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be read.

THE CHIEF CLERK. After line 1633 of section 1 it is proposed to insert:

To pay George F. Potter, an employe of the Senate post-office, $320, being the difference between the pay of a laborer and that of a clerk from February 6, 1894, to March 4, 1895.

Mr. PLATT. I feel bound to say, as a member of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, that there are many claims of that same nature which the committee has been very much importuned to report favorably upon, and we have declined to do it.

Mr. McMILLAN. This claim is in the same situation as the other claims of Senate employes inserted in the bill. I do not know that the amendment was referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and it has the approval and indorsement of the Sergeant-at-Arms, just as the items embraced in the bill on pages 66 and 67 have.

The amendment proposes to pay the amount named to one of the employes of the Senate who received the wages of a laborer while performing the duties of a clerk, and very important duties. He is detailed at the city post-office and superintends the distribution of all the mail for the Senate post-office. He is an expert in that matter, and performs very faithful and efficient service.

The amendment has taken the course that all the amendments inserted in the bill have taken; and the Committee on Appropriations merely overlooked it in the hurry of the discharge of their duties.

Mr. PLATT. This claim I understand to be one of a number that seem in some way or other to have been laid before the Committee on Appropriations, while others of like character have been laid before the Committee on Contingent Expenses. There are a variety of cases where for one reason or another a person has been put upon the laborers' roll here, and was glad to be put upon it, but has been assigned to the performance of the duty of a messenger, or person receiving higher pay, and he was very glad to do that work. The practice is that after a while they come in and ask for the difference between a laborer's pay and a messenger's pay or the pay of a person of higher salary.

A good many of those cases have been brought to the attention of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and I feel bound to say, in the absence of the chairman of that committee, that we have felt that such a person ought to receive the salary of the office which he accepted and not of the office the duties of which he performed when he was undoubtedly very glad to perform them.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have not heard of any such objection made by the Senator from Connecticut in regard to similar items which are in this bill, although they were adopted in his presence. The services performed in this case are of a highly meritorious character. The person who discharges these services is an expert in regard to post-office matters. He superintends the distribution of the entire mail for the Senate from the city post-office. He is there constantly laboring, and is very diligent. This is certainly a very meritorious case, and as similar amendments in other instances have been passed this one should receive the same consideration.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for a division.

There were, on a division—ayes 6, noes 25; no quorum voting.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a quorum present.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks there is a quorum present.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will withdraw his objection unless there is something very important about it upon which he must insist. Here are claims of this character which the Senate has voted in favor of on this bill, and in this case there has been an omission merely through an inadvertence and an oversight. The amendment has received the same indorsement and the same attention which the other claims inserted in the bill have received.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum has voted. The Chair must ascertain the presence of a quorum first before entertaining any business.

Mr. HARRIS. I demand the yeas and nays as the shortest way of developing the presence of a quorum.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs leave to suggest that there is a quorum in the Chamber, if Senators will oblige the Chair by voting. If there be no objection, the Chair will again put the question.

Mr. SABIN. I trust that the objection to the amendment will be withdrawn. I know something of this case. I have been informed by the postmaster and by several members of the Department that this is one of the most worthy objects which could be presented; that this gentleman is doing clerical work in the Department, and is working at least an average of fourteen or fifteen hours a day. He is a very efficient and experienced clerk, and has been transferred there from the laborers' roll.

I believe there has not been a more meritorious amendment offered to the bill than the one which has been offered by my colleague. I certainly hope that in this case this small pittance will not be denied by a discrimination against this gentleman.

Mr. BROWN. My objection is—

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the debate ought not to be entertained without the consent of the Senate. The Chair will hear the Senator from Georgia, if there be no objection.

Mr. BROWN. I ask unanimous consent to say a word in reply to the Senator from Minnesota, as he was heard on the other side. I object to the amendment as a precedent and think it is a dangerous one. I do not care to enter into a discussion of the question at this stage of the proceedings, but I do not think I ought to withdraw the call for a division, because it is very evident that a large majority of the Senate is opposed to this claim. I will ask the Senator from Minnesota whether it would not be more appropriate that he should withdraw the amendment?

Mr. McMILLAN. If Senators insist upon taking the yeas and nays and opposing this claim, I suppose it will follow that when we come into the Senate with the bill those Senators will move to strike out all claims of a similar character.

Mr. BROWN. I have not heard of any other claim of a similar character.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President—

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must put an end to this condition of uncertainty. The debate is proceeding by unanimous consent. The last vote disclosed that no quorum was present.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent to say a word.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and unanimous consent is given.

Mr. PLATT. If claims have been already put in the bill of the nature of the one proposed by the Senator from Minnesota, which I did not suppose had been done, and if they have received the sanction of the Committee on Appropriations, I do not propose to make a point against a single claim which has been overlooked.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Appropriations in considering all these subjects touching the Senate employes had of course very little information, and sent for the Secretary of the Senate and the Sergeant-at-Arms. The matters which they presented, upon their statement that they had been investigated and were known to be right and just, the committee put in. The case now presented by the Senator from Minnesota was not brought before the committee by the Sergeant-at-Arms, but he stated to me after the bill had been reported that he would have done with that claim as he did with the others if his attention had been called to the case; that he was in favor of it. So I did not make any point against it for the reason which now animates the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. I withdraw my objection to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Then let us take a vote on the amendment.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Chair will take another division.
The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 23, noes 19.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; that the House concurred in the ninth, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, twenty-sixth, thirty-fifth, forty-first, forty-second, seventy-fifth, and seventy-sixth amendments of the Senate to the said bill; that it further insisted on its disagreement to the twenty-seventh, twenty-eighth, one hundred and tenth, one hundred and eleventh, one hundred and twelfth, and one hundred and thirteenth amendments of the Senate to the said bill, and agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. E. JOHN ELLIS of Louisiana, Mr. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN of Indiana, and Mr. THOMAS RYAN of Kansas managers of the further conference on the part of the House.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to present an amendment which I reported from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and was omitted, I think, as a mere oversight by the Committee on Appropriations. But before asking action upon the amendment I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that the paragraph embraced in lines 451, 452, and 453 is an amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations and was not acted upon when the bill was being regularly read for action upon the amendments of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair was not here at the time.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to expedite business I make the suggestion for the unanimous consent of the Senate that as soon as this bill is disposed of we shall proceed to the consideration only of pension cases reported favorably, and none others, or probably that a recess be taken until 8 o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that we conclude the appropriation bill before we try our hand as to what we shall do next.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am afraid we shall be in a few minutes without a quorum, and then we shall have tied ourselves here, and may waste two or three hours.

Mr. HALE. I hope we may finish the bill in fifteen minutes, and then take a recess for two hours.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is exceedingly important that we should dispose of the fortification bill this evening, and I think it can be done in fifteen minutes when we get through with this bill.

Mr. HALE. Let us get through with this bill first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has called the attention of the Senate to an amendment which was informally passed over.

The Chief Clerk will report the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 450, the committee reported to insert: To pay Michael Conlan for services as messenger in the National Board of Health from July 24, 1883, to—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. This man was employed as a messenger in the National Board of Health. Every dollar of salary that was due him for the time he served was paid him, but I find in the sundry civil appropriation act of 1883 that there was an appropriation to pay him for the same services over again to the extent of two hundred and forty-eight dollars and some cents. I think this amendment ought to be rejected. That is all I have to say about it. I am indifferent as to what is done with it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. Now I ask action upon the amendment which I sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. Beginning at line 441, it is moved to strike out all down to and including the word "dollars," in line 450, in the following words:

For salary of the secretary of the board from April 1, 1884, to March 1, 1885, $1,100.

For pay of messenger from July 1, 1884, to March 31, 1885, $900.

For rent of building from July 1, 1884, to March 31, 1885, $900.

And to insert:

For per diem and expenses of members of the board, including the salary of the secretary, from April 21, 1884, to June 30, 1885, $5,550; for rent, light, fuel, stationery, telegrams, and postage, $1,400; for salaries of employes, $800; for incidental expenses, $150; in all, $7,900.

Mr. HALE. As I understand the amendment, from listening to it, it is meant to carry the appropriations through the remainder of the fiscal year, instead of stopping in March.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the precise point. The House appropriation covers the deficiency to the 31st day of March, but does not extend it to the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMPTON. In section 2, after line 61, I move to insert:

Ten thousand five hundred dollars, to refund to persons money collected from them without warrant of law as in payment of dues under the direct-tax laws, in accordance with the recent decision of the Court of Claims in the case of Joseph W. Harrison vs. the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HAMPTON. Before the amendment is acted on I beg to say that there was a typographical error in the print in the name of this man, which I have corrected. The printed copy reads "James W. Harrison." The name is "Joseph W. Harrison." I offer the amendment in accordance with a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending that—

Ten thousand five hundred dollars should be appropriated to refund to persons money collected from them without warrant of law as in payment of dues under the direct tax-laws, in accordance with the recent decision of the Court of Claims in the case of Joseph W. Harrison vs. the United States.

It is accompanied by a recommendation for its favorable consideration by Congress and signed "H. McCulloch, Secretary."

Mr. HALE. I do not understand that this is a judgment of the Court of Claims, but it is a claim based upon some principle enunciated or established in a decision of that court. While that might entitle it to the consideration of the proper committee, I am very clear that it should go to some other committee than the Committee on Appropriations, and therefore I must make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAMPTON. I suggest to my friend from Maine that this amendment was by the decision of the Chair referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I thought it was simply an accident that it had been omitted.

Mr. DOLPH. After line 1489 I move to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the accounts of Edward S. Kearny, late United States marshal for the district of Oregon, from March 3, 1884, to August 4, 1884, $2,520.46, or so much thereof as shall be necessary.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator from Oregon if there is a regular estimate from the Secretary of the Treasury with a recommendation of the appropriation.

Mr. DOLPH. It comes with a recommendation from the Committee on the Judiciary. It was introduced by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. It was referred to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary and reported favorably from that committee. I take that to be the judgment of the committee that it is a proper amendment to the bill.

The facts are simply that the term of Mr. Kearny, the United States marshal for Oregon, expired on the 3d of March, 1884. He held over because his successor was not appointed until the 1st of August, 1884. He earned his fees and paid money for the expenses of the courts. When he came to the Treasury Department to settle his accounts the officers there held that because the court did not make an order on the 3d of March appointing him they could not pay the expenses out of the regular appropriation. This is simply an appropriation to enable the Secretary to settle for his fees during the interim.

As I said, we have the judgment of the Committee on the Judiciary that it is a proper amendment; and more than that, I offer it under a clause precisely similar in the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Paul Strobach, late United States marshal for the southern district of Alabama, almost in identical language, which is already in the bill. It involves no appropriation. It simply authorizes the adjustment of the accounts and makes the appropriation to pay them when they are adjusted. It authorizes the settlement of accounts which accrued in the ordinary business, in the performance of the official duties of the marshal for the district, and the only reason why he was not paid without an appropriation by Congress was that there had been a neglect of the court to enter an order on the 3d of March that he should act as marshal. But he did hold over as he supposed under the original appointment with his bondsmen, and performed the services.

Mr. HALE. Did the Committee on the Judiciary report this as an amendment to the appropriation bill, sending it to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. DOLPH. They did, and it went to the Committee on Appropriations in connection with another amendment. Both were submitted at the same time. One of the amendments submitted by me was adopted by the committee, and this amendment, I suppose, was accidentally omitted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. After line 379 I move to insert:

To reimburse Grafton Munroe, postmaster at Annapolis, Md., for losses by burglary February 4, 1884, as follows, namely: For postage-stamps, $3,655.52; for postal funds, $2,430; and for money-order funds, $659.61.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. GORMAN. There can be no question about this amendment. I offered it in the Senate, and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, accompanied with a letter from the Postmaster-General, in which he states the fact of the burglary and loss at the Annapolis post-office and that the whole matter had been investigated by the Department.

The act of 1882 provides for the adjustment of these claims except for postal funds. The amount of those funds lost was $2,430.

Annapolis, the capital of Maryland, is, I believe, the only State capital in the Union where provision has not been made for a post-office building. A temporary affair is rented, which is far from being burglar-proof. The young gentleman who is now postmaster at Annapolis met with this loss, and it has left him absolutely bankrupt.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Postmaster-General, in which he says he has had the affair investigated, and that the amounts other than that for postal funds the Post-Office Department would allow, but under the act of 1882 he can not allow for postal funds without further legislation. It is a perfectly just and meritorious claim, and all the provisions of the rule have been complied with.

Mr. HALE. That is the kind of claim which is continually being reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I must make the point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine makes the point of order. The Chair holds that the point is well taken.

Mr. MORGAN. At the last session of Congress a committee was raised in the Senate and another committee was raised in the House for the purpose of investigating the capacity of this country for producing iron, steel, &c. The two committees, having precisely the same duties, during the recess of Congress acted jointly on several occasions. They procured, as was mentioned by the chairman of the committee to-day, a good deal of information of a valuable character. The House expiring to-morrow at 12 o'clock, it can not by resolution appoint a committee. That can only be done by an act of Congress.

It has been brought to the attention of the Senate committee by members of the House that it is very desirable that these two committees should be maintained in some way, so that they may continue their joint action during the coming recess. The Senate this morning authorized its committee to sit in the vacation and to proceed to complete this very important work.

The committee of the Senate to inquire into the capacity of steel-producing works in the United States have instructed me under the circumstances to present an amendment and to ask that it may be placed upon this bill. I wish to remark before the amendment is read that it must be in its nature until the 1st of June a deficiency, because there is no money remaining appropriated now, so far as I am advised at least, out of which the House committee could be supplied. I ask the attention of the Senate to the amendment. After line 1743 I move to insert:

To defray the necessary expenses of the select committee of the House of Representatives, raised under a resolution of the House adopted July 6, 1884, to inquire as to the capacity of steel-producing works in the United States, and for other purposes, $3,000. And said committee, with its present membership, is continued as a commission until January 1, 1886. Said sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. HARRISON. Do I understand this item to relate to a House committee?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; it is to enable the House to continue its committee. Otherwise it could not do so.

Mr. HARRISON. Have these committees been ordered separately, and are they acting together?

Mr. MORGAN. They have been appointed separately and are acting together, and without this amendment the House portion of the committee falls entirely, and we shall lose the benefit of their services and of the experience they have gained.

I wish to make one further remark. This very important matter, as I conceive it to be and as every Senator here will admit it is, will depend for its success, and more particularly for its speedy success, upon the concurrence of the committees of the two Houses.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. As I understand, the amendment proposes to provide for the House portion of the Joint Committee on the Library or the Committee on Rules.

Mr. MORGAN. It is neither. It is to inquire into the steel-producing capacity of the United States.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. But the present House of Representatives dies to-morrow at 12 o'clock. Perhaps the gentlemen who now compose the committee have not been re-elected. I do not see how we can create such a committee.

Mr. MORGAN. All the members who were appointed on that committee have been re-elected to the next House. The amendment proceeds to constitute the House part of the committee a commission.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I have no objection at all to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SABIN. After line 1430, I move to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Clement A. Lounsberry, postmaster at Bismarck, Dak., the sum of $750, that being the amount expended by said Lounsberry in the payment of clerks necessarily employed in said office from April 1, 1881, to June 30, 1882, and which amount was disallowed in the settlement of his accounts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. SABIN. The substance of the amendment is a bill reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which is on the Calendar. It is a shortage due the Department by the postmaster at Bismarck, which was occasioned by extra clerk-hire during the three or four years when the Northern Pacific Railroad was being constructed and when a large and unexpected mass of post-office business accumulated in his office. The Department are insisting, of course properly, upon a settlement of the accounts, and are threatening unless the same be settled at once the arrest of the ex-postmaster.

Mr. Lounsberry is one of the best citizens in that Territory. He is one of the pioneers. He was a gallant soldier, and he settled at Bismarck during its early days. He is entirely financially incapacitated to meet this demand upon him. It is a thoroughly worthy and meritorious allowance, and I trust there will be no question about the Senate allowing the claim.

Mr. HALE. I must pursue the same course in this case that I have pursued in others, and make the point of order upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must decide that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. CONGER. Before the Chair decides the amendment to be out of order I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the question. This amount is recommended by the Postmaster-General. It was estimated for and recommended to Congress to be passed. It has all the indicia of a regular estimate for an appropriation to be made in this bill.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator that it is not the Postmaster-General who has the authority by law to submit estimates, but it is the Secretary of the Treasury. The heads of other Departments do not submit estimates to Congress. All their estimates are revised by the Secretary of the Treasury, who then submits them to Congress.

Mr. CONGER. That may be a very good statement of fact, but it has nothing to do with our rule.

Mr. WILSON. I will state that this case was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and that committee unanimously reported the bill which has been used for the purpose of presenting this amendment. The amendment is in the precise language of the bill reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. In his communication to the House committee the Postmaster-General used this language:

On account of the large registry business, and the large amount of free business originating in the several Government offices located at Bismarck, there is no doubt that the clerical force employed by the postmaster was needed to conduct the business of the office.

He paid his money, his vouchers were presented, and, as I said, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads reported unanimously in favor of the passage of a bill for his relief.

Mr. CONGER. One of the provisions of the first paragraph of Rule XVI is that such an amendment shall not be in order "unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate," which has been done in this case, "or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments." What is a Postmaster-General but the head of some one of the Departments?

Mr. HALE. But the Postmaster-General does not submit estimates to Congress. The Senator, I presume, is aware that all the estimates come from the Secretary of the Treasury. He is the revising power. The propositions which are sent to Congress, and come before the Committee on Appropriations, are some of them from the Postmaster-General through the Secretary of the Treasury, thereby making it an estimate, or from the Secretary of the Navy through the Secretary of the Treasury, thereby making it an estimate, but it is never considered an estimate regularly made unless transmitted by the final scrutinizing power.

Mr. CONGER. I should like to have the decision of the Chair whether the rule is to be construed to read:

Or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments through the Secretary of the Treasury.

I supposed we had rules that were intelligible to a common understanding, and I claim to have at least the ordinary understanding of language.

Mr. HALE. Has this ever been estimated for by the Postmaster-General?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; and recommended to Congress for passage.

Mr. HALE. Where?

Mr. CONGER. In a printed document sent to the House, which is to be found in Senate report No. 1024.

Mr. HALE. I have not looked at that document, but I am informed by members of the committee who have considered the question that this item has never been estimated for.

Mr. CONGER. I have read, I think, the proposition of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. HALE. There may be a letter from him.

Mr. CONGER. It is an estimate.

Mr. HALE. Hardly.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator undoubtedly withdraws the point he made about an estimate coming from the Secretary of the Treasury to be effective.

Mr. HALE. No; I do not withdraw it. I do not know what the course has been in the Senate, but I know the law requires that all estimates shall be submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that everything in relation to estimates comes through that channel.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me for making a statement from memory, I think I am not mistaken in saying that a letter from the head of a Department coming in while an appropriation bill is on its passage, long after the regular estimates are made at the beginning of a session of Congress, applies; and items of proposed expenditure have been repeatedly sent in by every Department.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is much older in Senatorial life than I am, but I know that in looking at estimates one of the questions which the committee considers is that the estimate must go through the revising power. The Secretary of the Treasury frequently cuts down the estimates of other Departments.

Mr. CONGER. In that way, according to the rule, there would be no such thing as "an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments" unless the Secretary of the Treasury consented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the opinion of the Chair that under the existing law this is not an estimate of the head of a Department unless it comes in accordance with law through the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury revises and submits these estimates. It is a good foundation.

Mr. CONGER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan will wait until the Chair has concluded his remark. The Chair is of opinion that it would be an excellent basis of a bill to pay the claim, but if a technical objection is made that it is not an estimate in the sense of the law, the Chair is of opinion that the point is well taken.

Mr. CONGER. Unless the estimate comes through the Secretary of the Treasury?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. CONGER. From that I appeal. I appeal from that construction of the last part of the first clause of Rule XVI, which reads "or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it. The Senate decides that an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments is an estimate in the sense of the sixteenth rule.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose the amendment is now regularly before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Now let us see whether the Postmaster-General has ever estimated for this item. I make that point of order, and I should like to have the Chair rule upon it.

Mr. CONGER. I will read the letter of the Postmaster-General:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL, SALARY AND ALLOWANCE DIVISION,
Washington, D. C., April 5, 1884.

SIR: Your letter of the 24th ultimo to the Postmaster-General, inclosing Senate bill 1694, for the relief of Clement A. Lounsberry, postmaster at Bismarck, Dak., has been referred to this office.

In reply you are informed that the claim of Mr. Lounsberry appears to be for the sum of $750 alleged to have been expended by him for clerk-hire, from April 1, 1881, to June 30, 1882, in excess of the authorized allowances made by this office; and from a letter addressed to this office by Mr. Lounsberry, the amount claimed is itemized as follows:

Paid to Frank D. Bolles:
Second quarter, 1881.....	$150
Third quarter, 1881.....	150
Fourth quarter, 1881.....	150
First quarter, 1882.....	150
Paid to C. M. Lounsberry:
Second quarter, 1882.....	150
Total.....	750

It also appears from his statement that during the year 1881 his total expenditure for clerk-hire was $1,150, or $450 in excess of the amount allowed by the Department; and in 1882 he paid $1,300 for clerk-hire, or $475 more than his allowance for clerks. During the year 1883 $2,000.83 was expended for clerk-hire, or an excess of $600.83 more than the regular allowance for clerks; but out of the surplus fund for clerks in post-offices at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, the sum of $404.13 was approved and allowed by this office.

The gross receipts which accrued at the Bismarck post-office during the years in question were as follows:

1881.....	$6,573 61

On account of the large registry business, and the large amount of free business originating in the several Government offices located at Bismarck, there is no doubt that the clerical force employed by the postmaster was needed to conduct the business of the office.

Very respectfully,

FRANK HATTON,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. JAMES F. WILSON,
Chairman Subcommittee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HALE. What I asked for was the estimate of the head of the Department. There has been nothing thus far that even under such a construction of the rule as the Senate has just placed upon it would let this claim in. The paper that has just been read is nothing but a communication from one of the subordinates of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. CONGRELL. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me to read the law on this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGRELL. I read from the deficiency act of last session, which is now the law, page 254:

And hereafter all estimates of appropriations and estimates of deficiencies in appropriations intended for the consideration and seeking the action of any of the committees of Congress shall be transmitted to Congress through the Secretary of the Treasury, and in no other manner; and the said Secretary shall first cause the same to be properly classified, compiled, indexed, and printed under the supervision of the chief of the division of warrants, estimates, and appropriations of his Department.

Mr. CONGER. That does not change the question of the construction of the rule at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It fortifies the opinion of the Chair, however.

Mr. CONGER. It adds to the opinion perhaps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The opinion of the Chair remains as it stood.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that there is not even the estimate of the head of a Department for the amendment. If the Chair will look at the communication which the Senator from Michigan has just read he will see very clearly that it is not such an estimate. Does the Senator from Michigan claim that what he has read is the estimate of the head of a Department?

Mr. CONGER. I claim that it is from the Post-Office Department, and that it is from the proper officer who has charge of this branch of the service.

Mr. HALE. But the rule of the Senate which has been invoked and which the Senate sustained says "the head" of a Department. There is no subordinate in the Department who can fill that bill. The amendment is clearly out of order even upon the Senator's interpretation.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Hatton is the Postmaster-General.

Mr. HALE. He was not at the time he wrote the letter. I do not think we had better have much more of this discussion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine raises the point that the amendment is not the estimate of the head of a Department. The Chair did not ascertain the fact from the communication which was read. Was that from the head of a Department?

Mr. CONGER. It was from the then Assistant Postmaster-General, who is now the head of the Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that the point of order is well taken. The estimate was not made by the head of a Department.

Mr. CALL. After line 1633 I move to insert:

For compensation to T. B. Keleher from December 1, 1882, to February, 1883, as a skilled laborer and acting messenger, $250.

That is a similar case to the other items which have been adopted in the bill. It is a case which is well known to myself and to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] on the Committee on Patents. It has been recommended by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I offer an amendment which was offered once before, which the committee inadvertently left out. At the end of line 907 I move to insert:

For salaries and traveling expenses of the Mississippi River Commission, and for salaries and traveling expenses of assistant engineers under them, and for office expenses and contingencies, $50,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. CONGER. Is there any law for it?

Mr. HALE. It is simply continuing the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. CONGER. Why in this bill? I make the point of order that the amendment is not estimated for.

Mr. HARRISON. It has been estimated for. These are regular officers of the United States upon regular salaries. They are officers of the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. MILLER, of New York (in his seat). Their offices ought to be abolished.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from New York remarks sotto voce that the offices ought to be abolished, but until they are abolished I take it that their salaries ought to be paid. There can be no question, as the Senator from Maine will verify, that the estimates are in the Book of Estimates to pay the salaries of these officers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan make a point of order upon the amendment?

Mr. CONGER. It may be in the Book of Estimates, but I do not find it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair can not speak of his own knowledge. The Senator from Maine will inform the Chair whether these items are in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. HALE. I can not put my hand on the place, but I have no doubt they are. It is a regular established branch of the Government that is appropriated for every year.

Mr. HARRISON. What has that to do with the question when the amendment is reported from the Committee on Appropriations?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I did not hear it stated that the amendment was reported by the Committee on Appropriations. I thought it was offered by the Senator in charge of the bill. I will ask whether it was reported from the committee.

Mr. HALE. It was reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question on agreeing to the amendment and declared that the "noes" appeared to prevail.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to say just one word. I can not understand what Congress could mean, while the law remains constituting certain officers with a certain fixed annual salary, if the Congress of the United States shall refuse to pay their salaries. It does seem to me that the Senate of the United States is not ready to take that action. Here are these gentlemen constituting the commission—Major Harrod of Louisiana, Judge Taylor, and others. They have their offices and the expenses of rent incurred in pursuance of law; and yet the Congress of the United States proposes to say to that body of gentlemen, "We shall not pay you one cent."

Mr. HOAR. They could recover in the Court of Claims.

Mr. HARRISON. Undoubtedly they could. They could recover their salaries. It is an obligation which can not be affected by rejecting this proposition. It strikes me that Senators certainly have not realized this proposition, or they would not be voting here to refuse to pay an officer who is just as much entitled to his salary as any Senator who sits in his seat here. It would be just as fair a proposition to strike out this appropriation as to leave out of an appropriation bill the provision for the pay of Senators.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana if it is customary to make an appropriation in a deficiency bill for the salaries of regular officers of the Government?

Mr. HARRISON. This appropriation should not have been here; it should have been in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, or in the sundry civil appropriation bill. It has been put in one of those bills from year to year. This amendment is copied exactly from those acts, except that the annual amount appropriated heretofore has been $75,000 and the Committee on Appropriations have reduced it to $50,000. It is copied literally from the sundry civil appropriation act as it has passed the Senate year after year since the commission has been in force, except that the amount has been reduced by $25,000. This is not the appropriate bill, but on account of that omission it is entirely proper to have it inserted here, and the committee reported to place it here.

Is it to be supposed that those gentlemen could be removed by a failure to make the necessary appropriation, without any notification of dismissal, without a repeal of the law, having established, in pursuance of law, an office in Saint Louis, having incurred obligations for rent, having civil clerks and employes, having a large amount of Government property in their charge which must be cared for and stored and put out of the way if it is not to be used? Is it to be supposed that Congress has suddenly determined that it will pay them nothing, that it will not pay the rent of the offices they occupy, that it will pay them no salaries, that it will not give them a dime to travel to places where their implements of work are, in order to see that they are not put out of the way? I am sure Senators are not in favor of such a proposition.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. In section 2, line 373, I move to increase the appropriation for compensation of postmasters, readjusted under the act of March 3, 1883, from $140,498.79 to $240,498.79.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. WILSON. I am very glad to know that that amendment has at last been able to get before the Senate. For the last hour, representing the action of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, I have been trying to get such an amendment before the body, and I congratulate the Senator from North Carolina upon his success.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I wish to submit a brief word of explanation.

Under the law authorizing the salaries and payments to postmasters to be readjusted the Auditor has been readjusting them by States, and there has been heretofore a refusal to pay any until the whole were readjusted. The appropriation in the bill is intended to enable the postmasters to be paid as fast as their claims are audited and readjusted. The Auditor reported that on the 1st of January there were one hundred and forty-odd thousand dollars due; that by the 4th of March there would be $200,000 readjusted and ready for payment, and a still greater amount before Congress assembled again in December. In order to prevent those postmasters whose accounts may be properly readjusted under the law from having to wait for another appropriation I propose to make this appropriation $240,498.79 instead of $140,498.79.

Mr. WILSON. The amendment should be, I think, in several divisions, and in order to present it in accordance with the statement made by the acting Postmaster-General, I move to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, in lines 373, 374, and 375, by striking out "40,498.79" and inserting "78,481.23," so as to read:

For compensation of postmasters readjusted under act of March 3, 1883, payable from deficiency in postal revenues, 1882 and prior years, $78,481.23.

Mr. HALE. That makes the exact amount which has been reported as readjusted to this time?

Mr. WILSON. It does. In a letter addressed to the President of the Senate, the acting Postmaster-General says, with reference to this very estimate:

The total amount found due to the postmasters by adjustments completed to date is $178,481.23.

Mr. HALE. That is right. That should go in of course. The House did not report an amount large enough.

Mr. WILSON. That is the first amendment I desire to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. In line 375, after the word "cents," I move to insert:

For compensation of postmasters to be readjusted under said act during the remainder of the present fiscal year, $200,000.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to state that in the letter of the acting Postmaster-General from which I have read he makes this statement:

The probable approximate amount that will be found due in the adjustments made within the present fiscal year, with the present clerical force, may be stated at $255,436.

Inasmuch as this is an approximate statement, I have reduced the amount from $255,436 to $200,000, which will furnish an amount possibly large enough to meet the accounts that will be adjusted during the remainder of the present fiscal year.

The Senator from Maine who has charge of the bill raises the point of order against the amendment. I wish to state, in the first place, that this is in a certain sense an estimate of the head of a Department, although it does not come in the form prescribed by the law read by the Senator from Missouri a short time since. It does not seem to me that it is obnoxious to the point of order, notwithstanding it does not conform in that respect. This is in every proper sense connected with the business of the office for this year a deficiency. There has been no appropriation made for it, although under the general law these accounts should have been paid out of the current appropriations for the salaries of postmasters, and then the item would have come before Congress in the form of an estimate for a deficiency in connection with the appropriation.

Mr. HARRIS. I dislike to raise a question of order, but in view of the late hour of the day, it being the last day of Congress, I beg to state to the Senator from Iowa that a question of order is not debatable under the rule.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Iowa begs to state to the Senator from Tennessee that he is well advised of that, but he desired to explain the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I rise to a question of order, and my point of order is that the Senator from Iowa is out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A point of order is not debatable.

Mr. WILSON. I am entirely aware of that, but I was proceeding, as I supposed, by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desired information upon the amendment to decide the point of order. He is not now aware of the precise nature of the amendment proposed. The amendment will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 375, after the word "cents," it is proposed to insert:

For compensation of postmasters to be readjusted under said act during the remainder of the present fiscal year, $200,000.

Mr. HALE. There is no estimate for it here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. WILSON. Of course I do not desire at this time, and with a Senate which would probably disclose the want of a quorum, to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, although I believe that on a presentation of the question the amendment would be found to be in order.

Mr. BROWN. We had hoped to get through with the bill before this hour. As there is no telling how long we shall be detained in discussion here—

Mr. HALE. We are almost through. I think we can finish the bill in five minutes.

Mr. BROWN. If we can get through with it soon, all right; but I was going to make a motion to take a recess.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move to add to the bill the following paragraph:

For payment of laborers and others for services rendered, &c., in the construction of the light-house at Point Concepcion, California, as follows: Employees, Point Concepcion light, $3,784.70; Miguel Ortega, $420.14; Charles Ashton, $270; Pigeon Point light-station, $990.99; sundry small bills, $1,200.95; Martin and P. B. Murphy, $10,000; O. B. Shaw, $1,743.37; in all, $18,465.65, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury of February 21, 1883 (House of Representatives Executive Document No. 87, Forty-seventh Congress, second session).

Mr. HALE. I raise the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I wish to debate the point of order so far as to say that this is a deficiency because of the sums due for labor and material furnished in the construction of the light-house. The appropriations were made and the money was stolen by the Government officers having it in charge, and these people were never paid. The amount was estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury, February 21, 1883. The whole case is explained in Executive Document No. 87, Forty-seventh Congress, second session.

Mr. HALE. There is no estimate for this appropriation.

Mr. MILLER, of California. This is the estimate.

Mr. HALE. That is an old letter to the last Congress. There is no estimate for this Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the point of order is well taken, there being no estimate.

Mr. HALE. Now I hope we shall have a vote on the bill. I know other Senators feel as I do.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to take not a second in order to put the conferees of the Senate on the same footing with the House conferees in reference to the little extra allowance made to their employes by the bill. In line 1717, after the word "Senate," I move to strike out "and the Clerk of the House of Representatives;" and in line 1719, after the word "Senate," I move to strike out the words "and House of Representatives." That will put the conferees of the two Houses upon exactly the same ground in respect to this little petty appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER subsequently said: The Chair is informed by a message from the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] that in the deficiency bill there is a paragraph on page 62 which was temporarily laid aside and not finally acted upon.

Mr. HALE. That is well enough. There is no harm done.

Mr. DAWES. If it is in the text, it is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is reported to the Chair that the amendment on that page was informally laid aside and no action was taken.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has not been adopted and is not in the bill, and the bill is passed without it.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, so as to agree or disagree to the amendment. We relieve ourselves of all questions by acting on that motion. I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was passed and ordered to a third reading be reconsidered for the purpose of acting on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the votes passing the deficiency bill and ordering it to a third reading be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The deficiency appropriation bill is still in the Senate and open to amendment, and the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 52, after line 1262 of section 1, the Committee on Appropriations propose to insert:

For amount due to Isaac G. Baker for one hundred and sixty-two head of beef-cattle taken by Fort Peck Indians October 14, 1878, while in process of delivery under his contract dated June 21, 1878, $5,820.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the pending order be informally laid aside.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the regular order be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order will be laid before the Senate. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 7718) restoring John Snyder to the pension-roll."

Mr. DAWES. I ask that that may be informally laid aside to take up the fortification bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the regular order be laid aside informally that the Senate may take up the fortification bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Mr. DAWES. I move to take up the fortification bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to take up the fortification bill. The question is on that motion. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to lay aside one bill to take up another is not debatable.

Mr. CONGER. Is it amendable? If it is, I move to take up the river and harbor appropriation bill instead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question again. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to lay aside the pending order and take up the fortification bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. President—

Mr. DAWES. I suggest that we can pass this bill in ten minutes.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. If the Senator will permit me to have five minutes in executive session I will consent. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can pass the fortification bill in five minutes. There are only three pages of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. Now I hope we shall proceed with the fortification bill. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8279) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read for amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be read for amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 14, after the words "Ordnance Corps," to strike out "two of the artillery corps of the Army," and after the word "Navy," in line 15, to insert "and two civilians;" so as to read:

And the President of the United States shall appoint a board, of which the Secretary of War shall be a member and president, to be composed of two officers of the Engineer Corps, two from the Ordnance Corps, two officers of the line of the Navy, and two civilians, which board shall examine and report at what ports fortifications or other defenses are most urgently required, the character and kind of defenses best adapted for each, with reference to armament, the utilization of torpedoes, mines, or other defensive appliances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "appliances," in line 20, to insert:

And for the necessary and proper expenses of said board in the discharge of said duty the sum of $25,000, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated; and the report of said board shall be transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 26 to line 33, inclusive, in the following words:

For the expenses of said board, and for such plans, tests, and experiments as may be required to enable said board to determine upon the best methods of protecting batteries for defensive works, and for the purchase and erection of iron, steel, and composite armor in the form of sections of turrets, gun shields, and iron embrasures, for actual competitive tests, or any other question connected with their duties, $300,000, the same to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 46 to line 51, inclusive, as follows:

For the purchase and competitive test of specimens of the various kinds of machine-guns now in use, and of any others which may be presented and deemed worthy of consideration, but no type of machine-gun shall be purchased until tested and approved by the board herein provided for; for constructing and testing experimental gun-carriages.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to object to that amendment of the committee, because I wish to leave the War Department open to the right to purchase machine-guns. They are wholly constructed out of the appropriations in the fortification bill. They are in the estimates of the Treasury Department, in the recommendations of the Board of Ordnance, sanctioned by the Secretary of War, desired by all men who study fortifications or study the subject in any way. Now, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill how he proposes to have the money here appropriated, $450,000, spent; at what shops, on what kinds of guns?

Mr. DAWES. That is set forth in what remains of this provision. Mr. HAWLEY. No guns are described.

Mr. DAWES. The reason the committee proposed to strike out the "machine-guns" was because they thought that "machine-guns" are generally understood to be the Gatling gun, which is no part of the armament of a fortification; and therefore, inasmuch as this bill is confined simply to the preservation of the fortifications and the expenditure of this small sum of $450,000, we would not connect that with the manufacture of the Gatling gun. The committee have no hostility to the Gatling gun. Even if there had been in this bill a specified sum for Gatling guns it would have presented a different question from what it did; but under this provision as it came to us $450,000 is to be expended, the entire sum for the Gatling guns. We have purchased Gatling guns every year, and I think we ought to keep up the purchase of Gatling guns. I do not know of any other.

Mr. MILLER, of California. But yet there are others.

Mr. HAWLEY. He is ignorant; I will educate him.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know that it is worth while for me to talk any further about that.

Mr. HAWLEY. I quite agree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAWES. I will call the attention of the Senator to this provision in the fortification bill:

For the purchase and competitive test of specimens of the various kinds of machine-guns now in use, and of any others which may be presented and deemed worthy of consideration, but no type of machine-gun shall be purchased until tested and approved by the board herein provided for.

Without saying how much, how many guns, or what kind of guns, but any that the board may suggest, even to the extent of the entire appropriation, which is $450,000.

I do not know anything about guns, I am informed by the Senator from Connecticut, and that is true. It was unkind in him, however, to tell the Senate of it; but I do know this, that we have been from year to year appropriating a certain sum for Gatling guns. They cost about $1,500 apiece, and we have appropriated something like $25,000 each year for the purchase of Gatling guns. There is no disposition that I know of anywhere to take the whole range of invention and experiment upon Gatling guns and appropriate $450,000 for the purchase of as many as may be approved by this board.

I venture, without having any special knowledge of machine-guns, to state these considerations as the reasons which influenced the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, Mr. President, I wish to observe to the Senator from Massachusetts that when he said he was not aware of any other kind of machine-gun than the Gatling gun he displayed a very lamentable lack of common information on the subject.

Mr. DAWES rose.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAWES. You are touchy about it.

Mr. HAWLEY. The first man touchy was the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. I never discovered that I was touchy.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to call attention to the Book of Estimates, on page 159.

Armament of seacoast fortifications, including the manufacture and conversion of heavy guns and carriages.

When I asked the Senator kindly what was to be done with the $450,000, I had not in view that "conversion of heavy guns and carriages." I do not believe that it is of much practical use to take the old cast-iron gun and enlarge the bore, say half an inch or so, and put an iron or steel tube into it, and then put into it an elongated projectile two and a half times heavier than the original round-shot for which the gun was intended, to make the world believe you have a good rifled cannon. You have not; the metals are not homogeneous. The gun is really virtually weakened by taking out that cast-iron which is bored out from it. The shock of the explosion of the powder goes through that fine tube of steel. The gun is really, in my judgment, a weaker gun than it was before; and you do not deceive the military world into the belief that you have got good rifled cannon along your shores. The estimate here is frank about it.

That is from gentlemen supposed to be learned in their profession. They know very well that machine-guns are of the highest possible use in fortifications; that they cover and protect the curtains and the ditches; that modern engineers delight to put them in their fortifications all about Europe, and not only there but they put from two to ten of them upon their ships, various kinds of machine-guns, not alone the Gatling gun, made in my own town, to which the Senator from Massachusetts endeavored to add a little significance of sarcasm by saying, eight or ten times over, "the Gatling guns"—not the Gatling guns of Hartford alone, but the Nordenfheldt gun of Great Britain and the Gardner guns of Hartford, and the Hotchkiss gun made by another Connecticut Yankee in Paris, in Berlin, and in London.

There is a great range of them, from the ounce ball up to the 6-pound ball, and we have on this committee fired a 6-pound cannon from our shoulders, traversing the gun from right to left and elevating and depressing it, and firing a 6-pound steel shot that will go two, or three, or four miles with considerable accuracy.

The Senator speaks alone of the Gatling guns. I am very proud of the Gatling guns, but they are only a small part of those necessary. The Hotchkiss gun has its place as a most admirable and most wonderful and useful weapon.

I do not ask to say in the bill "Gatling guns." I say "machine-guns," and let the Ordnance Department take its choice for the different uses, whether a Gardner or a Gatling or a Hotchkiss, for the Hotchkiss differs from the others in certain military uses and possibilities.

The bill as it stands proposes—

For the armament of seacoast fortifications, including the manufacture of heavy guns and carriages—

It has omitted the conversion. I do not object to that—projectiles, gun-loaders, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, including compensation of draughtsmen on gun construction while employed in the Ordnance Bureau, $450,000.

That devotes the whole of it to the armament of seacoast fortifications, including the manufacture of heavy guns and carriages, except the incidentals referred to below.

I wanted to know from the Committee on Appropriations, for it is an important committee, and sounds well, whether they had in view at all the manufacture of a single cannon of modern style and power, a single steel-rifled gun of six or eight or twelve or sixteen inches caliber, such as we have got to have, and guns that will cost from $25,000 to $100,000 apiece.

I wish this appropriation were $5,000,000 and directed the establishment of a Government gun-foundry which should be complementary to a dozen manufacturing establishments which would furnish the pieces of the steel gun to the gun-foundry of the Government, there to be assembled and put in the form of a magnificent weapon, a modern magnificent rifled cannon. But this paltering with the condition of the country, which is virtually defenseless on the seaboard. We have not a gun that will penetrate the better armored ships, not one along the whole coast. Those ten and fifteen inch guns will crush vessels that can come in our harbors; but if you wish to arm harbors where eighteen to twenty foot ships can come you are helpless, and they are our great harbors. You are helpless along the entire coast. Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars will not make the steam-hammer that is necessary to build the cannon we ought to have now, and it will take you two years to build your steam-hammer—at least that.

I think it is quite competent in this view of the condition of this country and its coast and the condition of modern ships for me to ask, independent of this question of machine-guns, what we mean when for this defenseless country of 57,000,000 people and abundant revenue $450,000 is appropriated for the manufacture of guns, and heavy guns at that. I would have left there a discretion, as in previous bills, limited, if you choose, by a separate paragraph, to apply $20,000 for the purchase of machine-guns; but I would have adopted very nearly the paragraph recommended by the Ordnance Department. I will move to amend these few lines before striking them out or before taking the question on striking out.

For the purchase of machine-guns now in use and of any other which may be presented and deemed worthy of consideration.

Then strike out the reference to the board, because the paragraph providing for the board has been stricken out. I move to amend by striking out first, in line 46, after the word "purchase," all down to and including the first word "of," in the next line, as follows:

And competitive test of specimens of the various kinds.

My object will be to follow it by striking out the words in the forty-ninth line, beginning with "but" and running down to "carriages," in line 51; so that the paragraph would read:

For the purchase of machine-guns now in use, and of any others which may be presented and deemed worthy of consideration.

Then—

For the armament of seacoast fortifications, including the manufacture of heavy guns and carriages, &c.

Which would it is true lump up the whole expenditure of $450,000. I will intrust the War Department not to spend $450,000 on machine-guns. I am willing to trust them with the discretion to buy a few or whatever they think it is better to buy.

My first amendment is in line 46, after the word "purchase," to strike out down to and including the word "guns," in the next line. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Connecticut will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "purchase," in line 46, it is proposed to strike out—

And competitive test of specimens of the various guns.

So as to read:

For the purchase of machine-guns now in use, and of any others which may be presented and deemed worthy of consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I can not quite understand what occasion there has been for the Senator's indulgence in the tone of remark which has seemed to please him at this time. I wish to say that if in any remark I made upon his inquiry of me what we proposed to do with these $450,000 when I remarked that we proposed to do what was specified in what remained of the paragraph there was anything that either was calculated to pain the Senator from Connecticut or to justify his retort, I am very sorry for it and withdraw it. I have to say, however, that the remarks of the Senator do not seem to me to be called for or to be such as any gentleman ought to tolerate from another.

The Senator is quite right in saying that this is a meager bill, and I would say myself a contemptible bill. The War Department has estimated for this purpose seven or eight million dollars, and I myself would be glad to vote for an appropriation of four or five millions in accordance with an amendment that was proposed to this bill elsewhere. I think it is a shame that the Government of the United States appropriates only this pitiful sum for this purpose, and I quite agree with the Senator from Connecticut in his description of the state and condition of the fortifications in this country. But we are within a few hours of the last moment of this session. We have this bill here before us. We know that elsewhere the temper of another body is such that it is impossible to go beyond this. The test has been made elsewhere whether we would, as becomes the nation and its necessities and its exigencies, make appropriations for fortifications; and that test has failed, and there has come simply enough to take care and preserve the property on hand with the addition of this $450,000.

Under these circumstances the Committee on Appropriations thought it was best to get as much of this concentrated in the latter part of this session as possible. They did not think there was that need of any particular machine-gun in force as there was for other material and other expenditures provided for here. If I hurt the feelings of any one because I used the words "Gatling guns," I got it from the Senator's colleague upon my inquiry of him. I know there are other guns, the Hotchkiss gun and all manner of guns—so many of them that if I could have the pride of manufacturing them in the locality where I reside I would be glad to see any amount of money appropriated for the manufacture of them all and the purchase of them all. But so long as we can appropriate only $450,000, I do not propose for one to give unlimited authority to the Ordnance Department to expend the whole of it, if they pleased, in purchasing all kinds of machine-guns, wherever manufactured.

We last year appropriated $25,000 for the purchase of machine-guns of the latest improvement.

We had before us Gatling himself and his latest improvement, and it was for the purchase of $25,000 worth, about ten or twelve of these guns, that we made that appropriation last year. If it had been in that form, and if the Senator should make his amendment in that form, not specifying any particular gun, but the latest improvement of guns, I would not object to it.

If the Senate desire to put it in the power of the department without specification of how much of this meager sum of $450,000 shall be expended for one thing and how much for another, the Senate will do it. But in my opinion, when the estimate was made for the expenditure in all these ways, it was upon a scale at the Ordnance Department which called for an expenditure of $6,000,000 or $7,000,000; but when the appropriation is scaled down to this which may be properly called a very small and miserable bill, it is better, in my opinion, that it be not put in the power of the Ordnance Department to expend it all upon machine-guns or fuses or anything of the kind.

Last year we appropriated in these words, and we have adopted this year as nearly as we can the precise words:

For the purchase of machine-guns of the latest improvement, $20,000.

For the armament of seacoast fortifications, including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, including compensation of draughtsmen on gun-construction while employed in Ordnance Bureau, $400,000; and not exceeding $15,000 thereof may be used for the expenses of experiments in the use of dynamite or other high explosive projectiles.

That is the phraseology substantially which is left in this bill at this time.

Mr. HAWLEY. Excepting—

Mr. DAWES. Excepting $25,000 for machine-guns. I do not object to putting that in that shape.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will not say another word if the Senator will assent to that.

Mr. DAWES. Most certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will say nothing about the striking out of this, it being understood that I will offer in place of it the little paragraph that was in last year's appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. I will not object to that myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut withdraw the amendment proposed by him?

Mr. HAWLEY. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, to strike out from line 46 to line 51, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, if I am permitted to do so, I will move to insert just before this the words of last year's appropriation:

For the purchase of machine-guns of the latest improvement, $20,000.

In place of what has just been struck out.

Mr. DAWES. That is satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 53, after the word "carriages," to strike out:

For the purchase or manufacture of multicharge guns, and testing the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CHRISTOPHER PHILLIPS.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the sum of $41 be paid to Christopher Phillips out of the contingent fund of the Senate for labor performed for the Senate under employment of the Sergeant-at-Arms from November 10 to December 1, 1884.

RAILROAD BRIDGE IN TENNESSEE.

On motion of Mr. CONGER, and by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 8102) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a railroad bridge by the East and Middle Tennessee Railroad Company over the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-one minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. HAWLEY (at 7 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate take a recess till 9 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate took a recess until 9 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 9 o'clock p. m. and resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7785) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the printing of 9,500 additional copies of the treaties and conventions transmitted to the Senate by the President in his message of January 23, 1885.

PEOPLE'S NATIONAL BANK, LAWRENCEBURG, IND.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1466, being a bill to authorize the issue of a duplicate certificate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1466, being the bill (S. 2669) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate certificate of deposit to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say that this is like the ordinary case of lost bonds where the proof is clear and the Secretary of the Treasury recommends it, the amount being beyond the authority of the Department to grant relief.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATHAN H. DUNPHE.

Mr. HOAR. I move to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1047, House bill 754.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1047, being the bill (H. R. 754) for the relief of Nathan H. Dunphe, of Bridgewater, in the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. CONGER. I feel it my duty to ask the Senate to consider the river and harbor bill, as I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to do.

Mr. HOAR. This will take but a moment.

Mr. CONGER. If the Chair recognizes—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the bill named by him be now considered.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to say a word to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to be heard on this question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAIR. I rose with the design of asking unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to consider all unobjected House bills favorably reported and upon the Calendar. That, I think, would be in accord with the general sentiment of the Senate, and it is very evident that unless some understanding of that kind is arrived at we shall have nothing but a maelstrom of confusion and very little accomplished.

Mr. McMILLAN. You had better confine your request to pension bills.

Mr. BLAIR. I would be glad to do so, but I can not without meeting objection.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire what is the meaning of "unobjected?"

Mr. BLAIR. Bills that are unobjected will be those that on being presented to the Senate will not be objected to.

Mr. MORGAN. What becomes of the bills that are objected to?

Mr. HOAR. I hope my little motion will now be put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Chair to put the question.

Mr. MORGAN. With that understanding—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is proceeding by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to say that with the understanding that the objection may be made at any time, I shall not object to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire. What I wish to understand is whether if an objection is made it will be treated as under Rule VIII, so that the Senate can proceed notwithstanding an objection to consider a bill.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no such understanding as that.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I will object.

Mr. BLAIR. But an objection would carry a bill over.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for. The Senator from Alabama objects to the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. 754) for the relief of Nathan H. Dunphe, of Bridgewater, in the State of Massachusetts, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Nathan H. Dunphe of $2,400, in full compensation for twenty-five hogheads of sugar which were seized in the State of Louisiana, in the year 1863, by the military authorities of the United States, turned over to the Quartermaster's Department, and properly accounted for by that department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN B. DAVIS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to call up a bill that is on the Calendar improperly marked as a Senate bill on the Calendar, Order of Business 1043. It is marked Senate bill 568.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1043, the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 568) for the relief of John B. Davis.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the chairman of the committee—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The chairman of the Committee on Claims reported the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to substitute the House bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. First get this bill up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought it was up.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. No; the Senator from Kentucky desires to substitute a House bill for the Senate bill 568.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has not been taken up. The motion of the Senator from Kentucky applies to the bill the title of which has been read. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 568) for the relief of John B. Davis.

It provides for paying to John B. Davis, late contractor on mail-route No. 7506, Arkansas, $10,943.16, in full payment for transporting the United States mails between Memphis, Tenn., and the mouth of White River, Arkansas, and from thence to Devall's Bluff, in Arkansas, in the years 1863, 1869, and 1870.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now I ask to take up the House bill and substitute it for the Senate bill. The chairman of the Committee on Claims knows all about the case. I know it passed the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House bill is not in possession of the Chair or the Secretary. It is supposed to be in possession of the committee to which it has been referred.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that the committee be discharged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator know whether the bill has been reported?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the House bill and that it be substituted for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Kentucky send to the Chair a copy of the bill from which he desires the Committee on Claims to be discharged?

Mr. ALDRICH. While that bill is being looked for I ask leave to call up a joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Kentucky yields to me for the purpose of asking consent to take up Senate joint resolution 135. It is on the table now.

Mr. CONGER. I object to giving place to any one else if the Senator from Kentucky is not to go on. If not, I desire to make a motion to take up the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan objects to the bill now before the Senate being laid aside informally to proceed to the matter mentioned by the Senator from Rhode Island. Senate bill 568 is now before the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. While the clerks are hunting for that bill, I ask the Senate to take up House bill 1198, Order of Business 762.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kentucky that a copy of the House bill to which he refers is now here, but the bill itself is in possession of the Committee on Claims, having been referred to that committee by order of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the committee be discharged from its consideration and that the bill be taken up by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 653) for the relief of John B. Davis, be discharged from its further consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The committee is discharged from the further consideration of the bill. It is now before the Senate. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. PLATT. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

Mr. PLATT. Is there a report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report on the Senate bill.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut demands that the report of the committee be read. It will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. JACKSON January 21, 1885:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 568) for the relief of John B. Davis, having examined the same, make the following report:

That this claim has been repeatedly examined and favorably reported upon by committees of the Senate and House. At the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress it was considered and favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. At the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress it was again favorably reported by the same committee. At the third session of the Forty-sixth Congress it was favorably reported by the House Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. At the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress it was favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Claims (Report No. 202). And at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress the House Committee on Claims reported upon it favorably.

The facts of the case are clearly and correctly set forth in Senate Report No. 737, third session of Forty-fifth Congress, which your committee adopt, as follows:

"The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1857) for the relief of John B. Davis, having had the same under consideration, ask leave to report:

"That in the year of 1867 John B. Davis was a contractor with the Post-Office Department for the transportation of the mails by steamers from the mouth of White River to Jacksonport, in Arkansas.

"The mail matter for the central and western portion of the State of Arkansas, and for the northern part of Texas, was chiefly collected and concentrated at Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, carried by a line of steamers to the mouth of the White River, and from that point by petitioner's steam vessels to Devall's Bluff, on the White River, and thence by rail to Little Rock and other points west."

"The schedules for arrivals and departures of the vessels were so arranged, and by contract with the Post-Office Department, that the mails from Memphis and the West reached the mouth of White River ten or twelve hours after the petitioner's boats left that point, thus causing three or four days' delay in the entire mail service of all points west of Devall's Bluff."

"Great complaint was made by the press and people of Arkansas and Texas on account of these delays. In this state of affairs a special agent of the Post-Office Department directed Mr. Davis to extend his service and carry all the Arkansas mails through from Memphis to the mouth of White River. This service was performed once each week from the 1st July, 1867, until the 31st day of the same month, and from the 1st August, 1867, until the 31st March, 1868, twice each week, the petitioner having purchased another steamer to enable him to do this work."

"The Post-Office Department recognized this service, and in the month of May, 1868, paid Mr. Davis for the weekly service at the rate of $5,000 per annum, and for the semi-weekly at the rate of $10,000 per annum."

"Mr. Davis continued to carry these mails semi-weekly until the 21st March, 1868, but has never been paid therefor."

"In reply to a communication addressed by the committee to the Postmaster-General, asking information as to the nature of the service rendered, and the authority under which Mr. Davis acted, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, on the 29th May, 1878, stated 'that the certificate of the postmaster at Memphis shows the service to have been performed' from the 1st April, 1868, to the 31st March, 1868, 'but no payment was made after 31st March, 1868, as no satisfactory evidence of proper authority for the performance of the same was presented to this office until after the time had elapsed within which the appropriation for those years could have been used.'

"And in a letter dated 13th June, 1878, the same officer says that his predecessor 'deemed the authority from the special agent for the service was exhausted when' payment was made to the 31st March, 1868, and therefore declined further recognition of it."

"The committee is convinced that a valuable service was rendered by Mr. Davis, and with the knowledge of the Post-Office Department, and that some compensation should be made to him; but the committee has no means of ascertaining all the facts connected with these transactions, nor is it able to determine what would be a reasonable compensation."

"Since that time the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, in a letter addressed to the attorney for the claimant, states that 'should the contractor be paid for service between Memphis and the mouth of White River at the same rate as paid him for the service within the route under contract, the compensation would be at the rate of $5,837.50 per annum,' and, according to this estimate, there should be paid to the claimant the sum of $10,943.16."

"The committee are of opinion that the rate of compensation is reasonable, and recommend the payment of said sum, and the passage of the accompanying bill as a substitute for the bill referred."

"The bill thus recommended was identical with that under consideration, directing that Davis should be paid the sum of $10,943.16, in full payment for transporting the United States mails between Memphis, Tenn., and the mouth of the White River, Arkansas, and from thence to Devall's Bluff, in Arkansas, in the years 1868, 1869, and 1870."

Your committee believe that this conclusion reaches the merits of the case, and report the bill back to the Senate with the recommendation that it be passed."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House requested the return of the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives; which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 2, 1885.

Ordered, That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to return to the House the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas make any motion?

Mr. PLUMB. It is proper that the bill should go back to correct an error which was made in the last message accompanying the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill can not be returned except by an order of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I move then that the bill be returned on the request of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, and 6 to the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; that it further insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the said bill numbered 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20; that it agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that it had appointed Mr. R. W. TOWNSEND of Illinois, Mr. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN of Indiana, and Mr. R. G. HORR of Michigan managers at the further conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of 5,000 copies of the report of Capt. M. A. Healy, United States Revenue Marine, upon the cruise of the revenue steamer Corwin in the Arctic Ocean in the year 1884, and its accompanying documents and illustrations.

CRUISE OF THE CORWIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 3, 1885.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies of the report of Capt. M. A. Healy, United States revenue marine, upon the cruise of the revenue steamer Corwin in the Arctic Ocean in the year 1884, and its accompanying documents and illustrations, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Treasury Department.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate take up the bill (H. R. 8280) making appropriations for the preservation and continuation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill 8280.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read by paragraphs for amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the bill be read by paragraphs for amendment, and that the amendments of the Committee on Commerce be considered as the reading proceeds. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the bill may be laid aside informally in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of House bill 7718, Calendar number 1357, restoring John Snyder to the pension-roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks—

Several Senators objected.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to modify my request. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside informally temporarily, and that the Senate proceed to consider the unobjected House pension bills favorably reported and upon the Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill (H. R. 8280) making appropriations for the preservation and continuation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 5, after the word "direction," to strike out "and with the approval;" in line 6, after the words "for the," to strike out "preservation and continuation of such" and insert "construction, continuation, repair, and preservation;" in line 8, before the word "public," to strike out "uncompleted;" and in the same line, after the word "designated," to strike out "for improvement;" so as to read:

That there is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the construction, continuation, repair, and preservation of the public works mentioned and designated in an act entitled, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to ask the Senator from Michigan whether the amendment which has just been agreed to, striking out the words "for improvement," would not include, by its reference to the act making appropriations approved July 5, 1884, rivers and harbors that were designated by that act simply for survey. I think the language used in the House bill would discriminate between objects named in the river and harbor bill to which reference is made for improvement and other rivers and harbors designated for survey, and that by the amendment which the committee have recommended, and which the Senate has now agreed to, these appropriations would be extended to objects named in the river and harbor bill referred to simply for survey.

Mr. CONGER. I think not, and by the terms of this bill the appropriation made in this bill is to be distributed proportionately to the amounts appropriated in the last bill. There was no appropriation in the last bill for any of the works which came under the head of surveys and examinations. The appropriations for surveys are made in a round sum, to be expended by the Secretary of War for various purposes, and that appropriation remains; but when you turn to this bill none of the money appropriated here would go to the objects there designated for surveys and examinations, because no appropriation was made for them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 13, before the word "millions," to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" and in the same line, before the word "millions," to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

The sum of $10,000,000, which sum of $10,000,000 shall be applied by the Secretary of War to each of said public works, respectively, in proportion to the sums appropriated for such works in and by the said act.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONGER. In reporting this bill we increased the amount of the appropriation. The committee considered that the appropriation of five millions to carry on works for which almost fourteen millions were appropriated last year—

Mr. MAXEY. We are all very anxious to hear the Senator from Michigan explain the bill, but we can not hear a word, there is such a noise and buzz in the galleries and on the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please cease conversation and be seated. Senators and others in the rear of the seats will cease conversation. There must be absolute silence in the galleries. There are a great number of persons present and a very slight conversation among them makes a loud noise in the Chamber. The Senator from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. CONGER. I remarked that in the appropriation bill for rivers and harbors last year there were thirteen million and in the neighborhood of nine hundred thousand dollars appropriated; in round numbers about $14,000,000. I think I may say with the approval of all who carefully examined that bill during the last year that both in the House and in the Senate as far as the results go the examination of the several objects of appropriation was very full and unusually complete. On the re-examination of the bill in the Senate there were less at least than the usual number of appropriations made for unworthy objects in the usual sense of the word.

In the examination of the bill last year by the Senate Committee on Commerce it was the opinion I think of all the members of that committee that the examination of the several items of appropriation was very thorough, and that the appropriations were properly made. Liable to some objections as all appropriation bills frequently are for some inconsiderate appropriation, the Committee on Commerce are of opinion, and I join in that opinion myself, that the appropriation made in last year's river and harbor bill on the whole, saying nothing of the amount but the distribution of the sum total, was as judiciously and carefully made as in any bill that had ever passed Congress.

Now there comes to us from the House of Representatives not an itemized appropriation bill—and I regret very much that a proper itemized bill should not have come to the Senate—but an amount in gross by the terms of the bill to be apportioned to all the uncompleted works mentioned for appropriation in the last bill in the same proportion that appropriations were made for the several works in that bill except in the case of Galveston Harbor, Tex., where by the request of the Senators from that State and the Representatives in the House of Representatives no appropriation was put in the bill, the gentlemen from that State hoping to pass a separate bill for Galveston Harbor, and therefore in this bill there is a proviso that the appropriation for Galveston shall be as though $250,000 had been appropriated in last year's bill, and another provision is that where works have been completed with the money appropriated during the last year sufficient to complete the work, the money appropriated last year for them shall remain in the general account to be apportioned among the remaining works.

If it be true that the $14,000,000 appropriated last year was appropriated with reasonable care and prudence in proportion to the necessities and merits of the different works, then the appropriation made this year when apportioned pro rata to the several remaining works will also be properly and fairly distributed. At any rate that is the only alternative. The bill has come to us with this appropriation of $5,000,000. It came here on Friday night last, was laid over until Saturday under the rules, was referred to the Committee on Commerce on Saturday last, and yesterday the Committee on Commerce devoted all the time they could spare from their duties in the Senate in the examination of the bill. The result of the conclusion to which the committee came, although I think the regret was universal in the committee that a specific appropriation for each work had not been made in the bill sent from the House, was that no bill could now be prepared with an itemized statement, and that the only way to secure any appropriation whatever to carry on these great public works in all parts of the country during the ensuing year depended upon taking the House bill, amending it as the committee might think best, and reporting it to the Senate for its consideration.

The appropriation of $5,000,000 would give a trifle over one-third of the appropriations of last year to the several works named in last year's bill. In the smaller appropriations there would hardly be appropriation enough to warrant the continuation of work upon the improvement, and in all other cases, large or small, the preparations for work, the plant required, the distribution of the officials of the Engineer Department through the several works and their care would seem to absorb so much of it as to make it hardly worth while to stop there. Then if the appropriation of $5,000,000 was proper and correct in principle, or as near correct as any bill could be prepared, the appropriation of enough more to make the appropriations that were made available for the large and small improvements throughout the country was thought to be more desirable.

I may say, Mr. President, that in the appropriations of last year the rule of the committee was to give from one-quarter to one-third in the general run of the estimates of the engineers. So in round numbers one-third of the estimates of the engineers for the necessary work on all the great improvements throughout the country was contributed by the bill of last year. By the House bill about one-third of the amount appropriated last year is appropriated, or a little more than one-third. Last year we appropriated $14,000,000, and this year by the House bill $5,000,000 is appropriated. The committee thought, and I think, that if the appropriations were reasonably right and proper in the bill of last year, and if the uncompleted works are apportioned in the same proportion of those appropriations, extending the total amount to $10,000,000, there would be a sufficient sum to carry on with economy and with real benefit to the country as to each of these improvements the work for the ensuing year.

It is proper that I should say to the Senate that upon inquiry at the Engineer Department it has been found that owing to the lateness of the season when the last river and harbor bill was passed there remains on hand for the several works for which the expenditure was authorized somewhere in the neighborhood of $9,000,000, which is as yet unexpended. I think the 5th of July was the time when the last bill was passed, but before the bill had become a law and before the appropriations could be arranged for distribution and the work commenced upon them, especially in the North, the cold weather and stormy season had commenced, and in many cases but little work was done. With some of the Southern appropriations, where work could be done longer in the season, more has been done; but there will be a great balance of appropriation; and with this appropriation, whether it be $5,000,000 or $10,000,000, there will be money in the hands of the Secretary of War to prosecute vigorously, economically, and successfully the work on those great improvements for which the commerce of the country is so desirous.

Another inducement with me—I do not speak in behalf of the committee—is that if no appropriation bill should be passed this year except for the expenditure of the amount remaining on hand, there will be no further work upon these several improvements. Perhaps there has been no year for the last decade where the necessities of making these improvements for the benefit of commerce, for cheapening transportation, for giving safety and security in harbors to the vessels which carry the freight of the country, were more apparent than this year.

In addition to that there has been no time when such works could be carried on more economically in my opinion than during the coming season. All over this land, throughout all the regions where these appropriations are expended, business languishes, labor for the laboring man is scarce. There is no time when it would be more of a Godsend to the workingmen in every part of the country where these appropriations will be expended, and they will gladly work for less wages in these hard and troublesome times than they would demand at other times. And I confess that I am influenced somewhat in my desire to have this bill passed from the consideration that it will give at least $10,000,000 of work scattered through every part of the country to those who are lacking employment and lacking bread.

Mr. LAPHAM rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to know if the Senator is informed as to what amount of the appropriation of last year is unexpended?

Mr. CONGER. I have just made a statement of that; the Senator did not hear me. As we learn at a late date, within a few days, February 23, from the Secretary of War or the Engineer Department, the amount unexpended and ready to be expended on all the public works of the country is about $9,000,000.

Mr. LAPHAM. Then with this ten millions there will be nineteen millions appropriated.

Mr. CONGER. That would extend until another river and harbor bill shall take effect, which will be probably in the usual way at the long session some time late in the summer of next year, giving for the two seasons about $19,000,000.

Almost from the necessity of the case the appropriations for making these improvements throughout the great extent of our country in view of the great number of them carried on at the same time have been small. They have been too small for economic work by the Government on these improvements; and the people of the country have waited year after year for such improvements in the navigable rivers, for such harbors of refuge as should bring safety to its commerce, for the deepening of channels, for all the improvements embraced in this bill. They have been waiting year after year for the completion of these works, so that the produce of the farmer and the mechanic may be cheapened in its transportation and that the monopoly of the railroads may be met and counteracted by these great highways of the people in the transportation of their produce.

I feel an assurance that, with the increased appropriation which the Senate Committee on Commerce have recommended and with the amount now on hand, the work of carrying on these improvements by the Secretary of War and the Engineer Department will be commenced with vigor, will be pushed forward with success, and that the people scattered as they are all through this land who desire work and desire labor will receive the benefit from this expenditure which results so directly in the improvement of the water courses and harbors of the United States.

Now, sir, each Senator will judge for himself whether the reasons which I have suggested should have any weight, and will judge whether this be a good year, a proper time in which a liberal appropriation should be made for these works, both for the finishing of the works themselves and for furnishing in that act the means of living to labor and the wages of labor to so many thousands of people not in one locality but scattered through every State and every Territory of the land.

I submit, sir, these suggestions for the consideration of the Senate. I have said already that this bill does not come to the Senate in the form I could have desired. I have said already that for myself I would much rather, if we could have had the time to have it prepared, have a bill as a substitute for this looking over all the reports of the engineers, studying them as carefully as we are wont to do in other years, with which we could come to the Senate with every single appropriation fortified by the reports of the engineers and sanctioned by the judgment of the committee and of the House. That can not be. Either this bill must, in some form, amended or otherwise, receive the sanction of the Senate, or we shall have no additional appropriations to carry on these great works, which I believe are so desirable and so necessary for the growth and welfare of the commerce of the United States.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I disagreed with the majority of the Committee on Commerce and was opposed to the report of any river and harbor bill as such at this session. I was not opposed to it because I am opposed to improving our rivers and harbors. I was born a Whig, and that was one of the early doctrines of the Whig party, and I adhere to-day to that early doctrine, the importance of improving our rivers and harbors. But, sir, I regard this bill as bad legislation, unintelligent, and unintelligible; and there is no excuse in the world for it in my judgment. There have been three months for the preparation of a river and harbor bill by a committee elsewhere, whose only business was to prepare a river and harbor bill, an intelligent river and harbor bill, and send that to the Senate. No such bill has come to the United States Senate; but as the distinguished Senator from Michigan well says, within the last three days of the session a proposition comes here to appropriate $5,000,000 to be expended according to a river and harbor bill passed one year ago.

Suppose only $5,000,000 are appropriated. There are from seventy-five to one hundred items in the river and harbor bill referred to below $10,000 each; there are a dozen or twenty down to $1,000, $2,000, and $2,500; and if the Secretary of War is obliged to follow out the behest of this bill, then he is to put on these rivers and harbors from two hundred to six hundred dollars each. What important rivers they must be if such an amount of money can be of any commercial use!

There are, I say, from seventy-five to one hundred items less than $10,000. The proposition to appropriate $10,000,000 does away in part with that argument; but after a consideration of two months the river and harbor bill reported to the House of Representatives at this session left out from forty-eight to fifty of the items contained in the old river and harbor bill. Then if the Secretary of War is obliged to follow the law of Congress he will be compelled to appropriate of the $10,000,000 a portion to from forty-eight to fifty rivers that the River and Harbor Committee after two months' consideration decided were not entitled to a dollar.

I say you may look at it as you please, and there is no excuse to be offered to this country for making a lump sum appropriation by a river and harbor bill. The Senator says there are nearly $10,000,000 left of the old bill to-day. If so, nothing will suffer. It may be said that this money is necessary to keep improvements in repair. That is not true, because in the river and harbor bill passed at the last session we put in a provision as section 4 which says:

And for the purpose of preserving and continuing the use and navigation of said canals, rivers, and other public works without interruption, the Secretary of War, upon the application of the chief engineer in charge of said works, is hereby authorized to draw his warrant or requisition from time to time upon the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the actual expenses of operating and keeping said works in repair, which warrants or requisitions shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury.

So, Mr. President, if there are works to-day that are suffering or that will suffer next year for want of repair and proper attention, there is a provision which authorizes the engineer in charge to make his demand upon the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury to pay without limit any sums of money that may be necessary to preserve the Government works and keep them in repair. So there is not that excuse for this haste.

I am not going to weary the Senate with discussion; I am going to conclude with simply this proposition: It seems to me that the United States Senate owes to itself a duty in these premises, and it owes to this great country another duty in the premises, and that is to see to it when five or ten millions of dollars are appropriated that every item of appropriation shall have received proper, judicious, careful consideration by some committee of the Congress of the United States. It seems to me that the Senate owes a duty to itself, and that duty certainly can be performed without stopping the functions of this great Government. Where no Department is to suffer, where you do not take the Army or the Navy or the Judiciary by the throat and tell them to stop their lives, where nothing can suffer, surely the Senate owes to itself the duty not to make into law that which has received not one single hour's consideration by either the Committee on Commerce or the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in either branch of Congress, and can not receive in this branch over two hours' consideration, and did not receive in the House of Representatives thirty minutes of consideration.

For these reasons, sir, I oppose any appropriation whatever.

THANKS TO PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. PENDLETON. I desire unanimous consent at this time to offer a resolution, and I ask its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The resolution will be read for information, when the Chair will ask for objection.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are due, and are hereby tendered, to the Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, a Senator from the State of Vermont, for the courteous, impartial, and able manner in which he has presided over its deliberations and fulfilled the duties of its President pro tempore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. It is before the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to unanimously.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8280) making appropriations for the preservation and continuation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce, in line 13, striking out "five" and inserting "ten."

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the bill reported from the Committee on Commerce is not such a bill as I would have preferred. I am not at all enamored of it, but I do believe it is better than no bill at all. It is not the fault of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate that a better bill is not before this body, that we have not here an itemized and specific bill. That committee has had no time to perfect such a bill. It is presented here as it came from the House, with amendments in accord with the theory of the bill, as the best the committee was able to do under the circumstances.

The last river and harbor bill passed amounted, I will say, in round numbers, to $14,000,000. The pending bill, as reported from the Senate committee, appropriates ten million of dollars, to be apportioned among the different public works in proportion to the amounts given to them in the last river and harbor bill. That something is necessary to be done, that some appropriation ought to be made, no Senator here, no member of either House questions. We have a system of public works embracing all the rivers and harbors in the country, works progressing to-day and dependent upon the appropriation to be made at this session of Congress for their continuance. Not only that, but the Government has at all these points property or plant which it is necessary shall be protected and preserved from waste and destruction which will ensue from non-use. An appropriation for this purpose is absolutely necessary.

The House has failed to send us a specific bill making an appropriation severally for each one of these public works. The Senate Committee had not the time and the Senate has not the time to make specific appropriations for each one of them, and there is no other alternative left us than to accept the bill before us or have nothing. We can do nothing else but make an appropriation as this bill makes it, in solido, trusting to the discretion of the Secretary of War and the Engineer Department to expend the money judiciously for the conservation of the great interests for which it is appropriated.

The honorable Senator from Maine says that he opposes any river and harbor bill constructed in the lump as this is. Mr. President, can we afford to throw away the large percentage of the work already done, to be lost from the failure of an appropriation? Can we afford to devote to destruction and waste the Government plant and property employed in every river and in every harbor of the United States in carrying on these public works? We can not. If we can not, then we must appropriate; and as we can not make specific appropriations, we must appropriate in the lump, as is done in this bill.

Shall we cease to improve our rivers and harbors? We can not afford to do this. Let it be remembered that cheap transportation is the one thing needful in this country, and that how to break down railroad monopoly and secure reasonable freight rates for our products is the great question of the day.

The recent debates in this and the other House of Congress, and especially before the Commerce Committee of the House, participated in by the ablest men in the country in and out of Congress, and especially by the most distinguished experts in railroad and other transportation, while showing great variety and difference of opinion in every other respect, all concur in ascribing to the navigable waters of the country a greater influence as competing factors in bringing down freight charges on railroads than all other agencies combined.

Water competition is universally admitted to be the best, most reliable, and most certain regulator of railroad charges of any other, and where it exists the most desirable. This is a great fact which can not be controverted or ignored. The producers of this country, the people who create its wealth, are suffering from being compelled to give too large a proportion of their products as consideration for carrying the remaining part to market. The people of Kansas, of Nebraska, and other States are giving one bushel of corn for carrying another bushel to market. This instance is only an illustration of what is being done in a greater or less degree in respect to all the products of this country, and the wisdom of Congress is loudly invoked for relief. The cost of transportation to market is burdening the producers and taxing the consumers almost beyond their powers of endurance. We have endeavored during this session to legislate in the interest of these people in the regulation of interstate commerce, but have failed to accomplish anything. All concur in the opinion that a large measure of relief will come from opening up and clearing out our navigable waters. Is not this great object a worthy one, and ought we not to pursue it and reap for our people the benefits of its accomplishment? If there are those who doubt, are not the opinions of enlightened men who entertain no doubt such as impose the duty upon Congress to make the effort—to try the experiment if they choose to so term it? There can be no question about this.

It is true, Mr. President, that the House of Representatives has sent us a bill that we do not prefer, that we do not like, yet it is better than no bill at all. It has been amended—"five million" stricken out and "ten" inserted. Why can we not pass that bill? We can intrust the matter to the Secretary of War, to the Chief of Engineers. We abide by their discretion in all the river and harbor bills we pass to a considerable extent. Why can we not trust them on this bill as we have done on others when we have so great a stake at issue?

There is no reason in the world why we should not pass this bill. If it was a specific bill making specific appropriations for each public work, I should prefer it as you would, sir; but we can not have that. There is no time to perfect such a bill.

Mr. KENNA. Will my friend from Texas allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COKE. Certainly.

Mr. KENNA. I do not understand the position occupied by my friend from Texas in his statement that this is not a bill specific in its application to every work provided for by the last river and harbor bill passed by this Congress. My understanding of the provisions of the present bill is that it appropriates $10,000,000, to be expended in proportion for the prosecution of every work provided for in the last bill.

Mr. COKE. Certainly.

Mr. KENNA. The only difference, therefore, as I understand the situation, is that this bill appropriates ten millions and the last bill appropriated $14,000,000 for the prosecution of identically the same general works on rivers and harbors; and I deny that this bill vests any discretion whatever in any officer in any Department of this Government which was not vested in that same officer, in that same Department, by the provisions of the last river and harbor bill. The only difference on earth is the difference in amount. By the last bill we appropriated an aggregate sum of $14,000,000, the bill describing in detail the particular works to be prosecuted under it and the expenditure of the money provided for. By this bill in a lump we appropriate $10,000,000 to be expended in proportion for the several works throughout the country provided for in the last bill.

Mr. COKE. There is no difference of opinion between the Senator from West Virginia and myself. I supposed that the Senate understood that this bill appropriated in the lump, as I stated in the commencement of my remarks, for apportionment among the several works specifically appropriated for in the last river and harbor bill, and I stated in the last observation I made before the Senator from West Virginia rose, that we reposed, in every river and harbor bill yet passed, to a certain extent, in the judgment and discretion of the engineers and of the Secretary of War, and no more in this than in the others, but the same in this as in the others.

Mr. KENNA. I did not exactly understand my friend before as I understand him now. We are not exactly on the same line in the discussion of this bill, and my object in interposing was not so much to interrupt my friend the Senator from Texas as to make understood the fact that this bill does not invest the Secretary of War or any officer of this Government with any discretion whatever in the expenditure of any dollar appropriated by it.

Mr. COKE. I take issue with the Senator from West Virginia. I read from the bill the following provision:

That there is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War—

Mr. KENNA. If my friend will allow me to continue the reading of the same section—

Mr. COKE. I will continue the reading.

Mr. KENNA. If you please.

Mr. COKE. It continues:

For the construction, continuation, repair, and preservation of the public works mentioned and designated in an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes."

Mr. KENNA. And now will my friend allow me to continue the reading? The same section of the same bill continues:

In proportion to the sums appropriated for such works in and by the said act.

So that there is no discretion whatever vested in the Secretary of War, except to expend the $10,000,000 appropriated by this act upon the same works whose improvement is provided for by the last act in proportion to the sums appropriated by the last act for the said works.

Mr. COKE. The Senator from West Virginia has stated simply what I had stated before, but now I call attention to a fact to show that the Secretary of War has discretion and that he exercises discretion. In the very bill to which the honorable Senator refers by which $14,000,000 was appropriated at the last session of Congress, which the Secretary of War was directed to expend, there is of that appropriation now on hand nearly $10,000,000 unexpended, because in his discretion the Secretary of War has chosen not to expend it.

Mr. KENNA. Oh, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me—I do not want to interrupt my friend—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia will not interrupt until the Chair has an opportunity of learning whether the Senator from Texas yields.

Mr. COKE. I do.

Mr. KENNA. I certainly do not wish to interrupt my friend from Texas, but the statement which he submits to the Senate now of the amount of money on hand for the prosecution of these various works is a statement based upon the report of the Secretary of War of the 1st of July last. We all know that, and we all know that since that time the demands of the current fiscal year have come into requisition, and none of us know to-day what amount is still on hand.

Mr. FRYE. The report was made February 23, and covered up to that date.

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir; February.

Mr. KENNA. But pardon me one moment further. If the Senator refers to the recent special report, then he omits from the calculation of that report the amount engaged by contracts entered into prior to and up to last July, and, therefore, the same application applies. The contracts for all the great works that are being prosecuted by contract were entered into prior to the 1st of July last, and every dollar that applies to the consummation of those works and the satisfaction of those contracts up to that time, not actually paid, is still on hand even to this very moment.

Mr. COKE. Now I hope, Mr. President, that I shall not be interrupted further.

I repeat my assertion that the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers have under this bill the same discretion that they have under all other river and harbor bills, and that under all river and harbor bills they have discretion to expend or not to expend the money, because it is a notorious fact that they do absolutely refuse to expend money under appropriations made under directions like those contained in this bill when in their judgment the expenditure of the money would result in no public good. Nothing is more common than this, and a volume of the Engineer's reports can not be found which does not show repeated instances of it.

I know that in my own State under a bill like this there are appropriations which have lapsed repeatedly because the engineers have decided that the money ought not to be expended, that the appropriation was not large enough for instance to justify the expenditure of the money, and in that fact is found the reply to the argument of the honorable Senator from Maine against this bill, where he says there are so many of these appropriations which will be whittled down so under this bill that it will be useless to attempt to expend them. In reply to that I have to say that this very discretion exercised by the Engineer Department and by the Secretary of War will prevent an expenditure of a dollar of those appropriations which are believed to be insufficient to accomplish any real good. So that so much of the argument of the honorable Senator from Maine as is directed against this bill on account of the smallness of some of the appropriations which will be brought down so low that no good can be accomplished with them fails.

I repeat I would have preferred that each one of the public works appropriated for had been named in the bill, but they could not be named. There was no time for it; there was no time for amendment. We could do nothing else but bring in a bill in the lump, in solidò, and we have got to take that sort of a bill or have no appropriation for the improvement of rivers and harbors at all; and I do contend, Mr. President, that the object for which this Government first commenced the great work of improving the rivers and harbors of this country is too great, too far-reaching in importance, and affects too large a proportion of the people of this country, to be abandoned or deferred for any light or transient cause, and that if we can not get the best bill that can be made for the purpose we ought to be willing to accept the best that under the circumstances can be brought before the Senate at this time, and such a one is the bill which has been reported from the Committee on Commerce.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for prior years, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

and had appointed Mr. SAMUEL J. RAYDALL of Pennsylvania, Mr. JAMES N. BURNES of Missouri, and Mr. JOHN D. LONG of Massachusetts managers at the conference on its part.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the presiding officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7785) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8280) making appropriations for the preservation and continuation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I am always glad to support any river and harbor bill, but I think this bill is perhaps one of the most preposterous that was ever presented. It is true we have sometimes had bills proposed in bulk to pay a lumpsum and leave it in the discretion of the Secretary of War. I believe that would be much better than the bill now presented, for this bill is hampered by the river and harbor act of last year. If Senators will look at the act we passed last year, ten pages long in close print, and then look at the estimates this year, they will find that in many instances there has been a less sum asked for this year than was appropriated last year. Of course it follows that works which are progressing and which have arrived at any near degree of completion do not require as much money in the succeeding year as in the past. It will be noticed also that a considerable number of the ports and harbors that were appropriated for last year are omitted this year in the estimates.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont whether the point which he makes, that it might take a small sum to complete works which are near completion, is not provided for in the proviso, beginning in the sixteenth line of section 1 of the bill:

Provided, That no more shall be thus allotted than is sufficient for the completion of said works under the present estimates.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Massachusetts knows that none of these works are ever completed. There is always room for the expenditure of a little more money. Who is to decide whether they are completed or not? The bill now before us provides that the money shall be expended in exact proportion to what was appropriated for each work in the former bill.

There is another difficulty about the bill. Throughout the whole act of last year there were various provisos and conditions upon which the appropriations were made. In the present bill there are no conditions whatever. If the port or place has been barely mentioned, then the money may be expended there.

Under these circumstances it seems to me that the bill is a bill that will work badly. Some of the places which require very little money may get enough and perhaps too much; while others which require more will hardly get a pittance. In the estimates of this year there are many points where appropriations are asked for which are not even named in the bill of last year, and it ought to be supposed that the expenditure of last year would diminish largely the amount required to be appropriated this year.

Again, the bill as now proposed to be amended appropriates a larger sum than the Department have estimated would be requisite. They have only asked for $8,000,000, and now it is proposed by the Committee on Commerce to increase the sum to $10,000,000, although by the statement of the Senator from Maine no longer ago than the 23d of February there was not less than $9,000,000 on hand. Last year the appropriation was for $14,800,000, and now, with the amount on hand and what is proposed there will be $19,000,000 to expend—a larger sum by $4,000,000 and over than was appropriated last year.

Under these circumstances I do not feel at liberty to vote for the bill. I think the committee should have distributed the appropriation where it was most needed; but under the conditions of the bill, without any discretion left to the Secretary of War, it must be distributed exactly according to the act of last year.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont has made two objections to the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I make three.

Mr. HOAR. One is that there are many works mentioned in the act of last year which a small sum only will be required to complete, and that the allotment made under the bill may be considerably more than those works need. I am surprised, knowing the usual candor of my honorable friend, at the answer he made when I called his attention to the proviso in the bill which reads:

Provided, That no more shall be thus allotted than is sufficient for the completion of said works under the present estimates.

How could the honorable Senator think of his answer to that proposition when he says we all know that these works are never completed? Who is to determine the matter? The Secretary of War will not spend more than he thinks is necessary to complete the work, and he can not spend as much as he thinks is necessary to complete it unless it is a sum within the limit of the appropriation for the present year.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to have the Senator refer me to some document which will show the exact amount necessary to complete any one of these works.

Mr. HOAR. The present Book of Estimates is the document.

Mr. MORRILL. The estimates are not for completion, but for continuation in a majority of cases.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, they are, largely. The original estimate of a work is always an estimate which gives the amount necessary to its completion. Then it goes on from year to year giving the amount that could wisely and profitably be expended in a particular year.

The Senator says that there are conditions and provisos in the last act and they are not repeated here. I think any lawyer would say that the legal effect of the bill is to leave the appropriation under existing conditions.

Mr. MORRILL. It does not say so.

Mr. HOAR. That is the legal effect. The sums being appropriated for such works conditionally, the condition would attach. I suppose the Senator would have no sort of objection to adding after the words "in proportion," in the fifteenth line of section 1, the words "and upon the condition therein expressed," or words the effect of which would carry over the condition of the appropriation.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President, it is a matter of personal regret to myself that I feel compelled to oppose the passage of the present river and harbor bill. It is well known to my associates on this floor that I have hitherto favored such bills which have been brought before this body, and that I have given much labor and study to the improvement of the rivers and harbors of our country. I have held, and still hold, that all proper appropriations for the improvement of our rivers, our harbors, and the canals which are under the control of the General Government are the wisest expenditures of public money that can possibly be made. Outside of the Post-Office Department no appropriations which we make bring back so sure and so quick a return to the people in actual profit as proper appropriations for our rivers and harbors.

But with my sense of public duty as a legislator I can never consent to give my vote or my voice for a measure which has received no consideration at the hands of the appropriate committee of this body. That is the condition of this bill. I do not stand here to charge dereliction of duty upon the co-ordinate branch of the Legislature, but for one I should be glad to see the rules of the Senate so amended that this body would never give a moment's consideration to any general appropriation bill which did not come to this body from the other House at least thirty days before the day of final adjournment.

If the Senate of the United States is to be charged with the duty of legislation, if we as the representatives of our several States are to be held responsible for public legislation, and particularly for the appropriations of money out of the Treasury, then certainly we should exercise our constitutional right of originating appropriation bills and passing them through this body; or if we are to follow the custom which has hitherto prevailed and permit the other House to originate all general appropriation bills, we should insist now and at all times that the co-ordinate branch of this Legislature should send us those bills in time, so that we may give them careful consideration.

No appropriation bill that comes before this body requires so much time, so much consideration, so much examination by committees and experts, so much study, thought, and work on the part of the committee having it in charge as does the river and harbor bill. It requires an accurate knowledge of every harbor, of every important river, and of all the canals which are under the control of the Government before the committee can act intelligently.

It does not follow that we can this year take the bill of last year and appropriate money in accordance with the provisions of that act. The engineers who have the work in charge are continually learning from month to month and from year to year that many of the appropriations and much of the work hitherto done have been experimental, and that a change is required in plan, or that the work should be entirely abandoned. By no possibility, in my judgment, could any general appropriation bill be so illy taken as the criterion for a coming year as the ordinary river and harbor bill.

It is an open secret that the committee in the other branch of this Legislature which considered this question from the opening of the session in December down to last week, instead of adopting and following the act of last year, failed to make any appropriations for nearly—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Chair must remind the Senator from New York that it is not in order to refer to the action of the other House.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It has already been referred to here by every speaker who has spoken. I am not referring to the action of the House, but I am referring to what is known and what every one knows to have been the action of a certain committee having this matter in charge. I think I may say within the parliamentary rule that certain persons attempting to make up a river and harbor bill left out of it nearly fifty distinct appropriations which were contained in the bill of last year, showing most conclusively that by their investigations and by the light which had come to them during the past year it was found that we did not need any bill like the bill of last year, but that we needed a new bill, with new provisions, with a large number of new appropriations in it, and with a large number of the old appropriations left out of it.

I gave my support to the bill of last year. As a member of the Committee on Commerce I took great interest in its consideration in that committee, and labored long and heartily upon it. The Committee on Commerce of this body made many radical changes in it. The committee struck out very much of what was generally believed to be unwise appropriations, but I regret to say that in the final consideration of that bill by the conference committee of the two Houses very much of the legislation which the Committee on Commerce had stricken out of it was put back, and that in that shape it finally passed this body and became a law.

But it needs no particulars in my judgment to condemn this bill. We are coming in my opinion to a condition in legislation upon rivers and harbors which calls for a halt. The people of this country are demanding not that the appropriations for rivers and harbors shall be limited to $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 per annum, but they are demanding that the appropriations shall be made for the great public works according to the necessities of the country.

A great change has come about in our merchant marine within the past fifteen or twenty years. In short, within the past five years the draught of nearly all sea-going vessels has increased from sixteen or eighteen feet to twenty, twenty-two, twenty-six, twenty-eight, or even thirty feet of draught of water. The result is that nearly all of our great harbors, or what were known as great harbors a few years ago, upon the Atlantic coast are now not able to admit into them the great ships of the merchant marine which come to them. At the port of New York, through which three-quarters of all the foreign commerce of this country passes, a large number of the foreign steamers running to and from that port to-day are not able to pass over its bar with more than three-quarters of a load. If that obstruction should be removed it would reduce the cost of transporting every bushel of wheat and corn which is sent abroad. To do the work there the appropriation carried in a river and harbor bill should be not less than $1,000,000 per annum. To give it a paltry $150,000, as it would have under this bill, would amount to nothing. It would be a waste of the money.

I appeal to the Senator from Texas in regard to his own great port of Galveston, to say to this body of what value will be the $200,000 which would go to that port under the provisions of this measure as it now stands if it should pass. If the Senator were to answer that question he could only say that it would be of no avail whatever. The works contemplated at Galveston require an expenditure of several million dollars. We have spent there a large sum already. It seems to be the opinion to-day and the growing opinion of civil engineers that the work at Galveston Harbor has thus far been largely a mistake—a mistake either in plan or in construction, it matters not which. If anything is to be done for the great State of Texas, which is an empire in itself—and certainly it should have a harbor into which the greatest ships floating from the sea could come at all times—the appropriation for Galveston Harbor should not be $150,000 or $200,000, but it should be all the money which the engineers can wisely expend in a fiscal year. Less than that is folly; less than that is wastefulness. It is a waste to spend only $200,000 a year upon Galveston Harbor. It would scarcely keep the work moving; it would scarcely keep it in proper repair.

Shall we go on in this way from year to year scattering our appropriations upon little rivers, many of which may be of value to their localities, many of which undoubtedly are, if not all of them, but certainly many of them are simply of local importance? They are streams which can be used for rafting lumber. Surely that is an industry demanding our consideration perhaps, but notwithstanding, the people of this country claim and will demand at our hands that in the distribution of the public moneys upon our rivers and harbors the great ports of this country shall be opened, and shall be opened in such a way that the ships of the present day can find easy ingress and egress.

What I have said of Galveston is true of the great works which are going on at the mouth of the Saint John's River. The Saint John's River is the artery of the State of Florida. The mouth of that river ought to be opened so that all the large steamers which desire to go there can get in. The appropriation which would come to that river by this bill would be of little or no avail. The appropriation for that river should be such that the work can be pushed to speedy completion, and then the great State of Florida will be developed. But we give it a paltry $150,000 or $200,000 under this bill—I do not know the exact amount—which will scarcely keep the dredges and the machines of the Government going. In other words, the money will be squandered, and this appropriation will be unwisely expended.

What is true of the mouth of the Saint John's River is true of Charleston Harbor. There we have undertaken large works, to deepen the water over the bar and to admit large ships to come into that port so as to carry the cotton grown in the adjacent country to England. The appropriation made under this bill, if it shall become a law, will do little or no good there.

Thus I might go on and specify item after item. I believe also that the large sum given in this bill to the Mississippi River and to the Missouri River will be largely wasted. I believe that the present condition of the improvements of both those rivers calls for a halt; that it calls for a full consideration as to whether the money heretofore expended has been wisely expended.

I want to say for myself that I am for the improvement of the Mississippi River and its navigation; I have always voted for it; but I believe that no bill should pass until that matter is fully considered by the Committee on Commerce, and until we have fully satisfied ourselves in regard to the criticisms which are now being made throughout the length and breadth of the country upon the improvement of the Mississippi River. Statements are made which require our careful consideration, going to show that very much of the work which has been done under these large appropriations has proved a failure; that it has shown that the work laid out by the commission and the engineers is to-day largely experimental. If it is experimental it can do no harm to make it wait for another year, until the money has been expended which is now in the hands of the Secretary of War for it, and that then we may carefully and considerably determine whether we shall continue the improvement of the Mississippi River upon the present plan. It is well known to every member of the Senate that the great engineering authorities of this country and of the world are not in harmony upon this question; that there is a great dispute going on as to the wisdom of the present system of improving the Mississippi River.

Now as to the Missouri River. Last year in the river and harbor bill we created a commission for the Missouri River, thus to a certain extent taking it out of the hands of the engineers of the Army and out of the control of the Secretary of War. I am satisfied that that was unwise. I am satisfied that in the very near future we shall substantially abandon all improvements upon the Missouri River. I understand that at the present day—I am so told by a Senator who knows—there is not running upon the Missouri River a single through steamer, that what is called through trade or traffic upon it has been substantially abandoned, and that the traffic upon the river now in steamboats is carried on only in stretches between some important places. If this be true, then certainly we ought to go slowly in appropriating large sums for that river. It is undoubtedly true that in the development of that country to the present time the river has been of much value, but it seems now that it is largely supplanted by the great number of railroads which have been built throughout that country, and which have shortened the distance of transportation over that hitherto upon the river.

Be that as it may, I hold it to be the duty of the Senate to see to it that no important legislation, certainly no bill carrying $10,000,000, shall pass this body without having proper time for consideration in the Committee on Commerce to which it was committed. The bill came to this body on Friday last. It did not fully reach the committee, printed and by reference, until Monday of this week. As the Senator from Texas said, there was no alternative left us save to take the bill with a few general amendments upon it, or to abandon it for this session.

But certainly the blame does not lie at our doors. The Committee on Commerce have been waiting for this bill for weeks and weeks, asking in our own way when it would come to us, until finally one Senator not a member of the committee took the liberty of introducing a complete river and harbor bill and sending it to the committee. But as this body has, I believe, in nearly all its past history waited for these bills to come to it from the co-ordinate branch of the Legislature, so we waited for this bill. It comes to us in the closing hours of this session.

Two years ago when a bill came to us not in this shape, when a bill came to us from the House of Representatives in complete and full detail, item for item, if I remember correctly, it reached us some three or four days earlier in the session than this bill reached us. That bill went to the Committee on Commerce, and what was the result? The Committee on Commerce reported back to this body that it had not sufficient time to consider that bill, and that it would make no report upon it, and the bill failed. However, no great evil effects came to the country from the failure of that bill. That bill, like this, contained petty appropriations by the hundred. It did not contain proper and sufficient appropriations for the great works of this country and I do not know that its failure occasioned great loss to the works. I have seen no report tending to show that any great loss came to the public works of this country by the failure of that bill.

Certainly the House of Representatives should have taken warning by that action of this body and should have sent us this bill two months ago. It could easily have done so. It could have sent us a bill which we could have considered fully and definitely; but now it comes to this, that another body, sitting in another portion of this Capitol, can take into its own hands all the appropriations for the management of this great Government, including every department, the Army, the Navy, the Post-Office, the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, and it can hold the bills until within twenty-four or forty-eight hours of the adjournment under the Constitution, and it can then bring in those bills here and say to us: "Take them; pass them as we have made them, or there shall be no bills, or you take the responsibility of forcing an extra session."

We are not sent here to legislate in any given number of days. We do not hold our offices for months; we hold them for years. If the public business of the country demands that this national Legislature should remain in continuous session for three hundred and sixty-five days in the year in order to complete properly the public business, then I hold it to be our duty to stay here and to give to the public business all our time. It is for that purpose that the States which have sent us here have given us our commissions. We can not excuse ourselves in the manner suggested by the Senator from Texas. It is no reason whatever in my judgment to say that this bill must pass as it is or there will be no appropriation for rivers and harbors and that the great works of this country will go to ruin and destruction.

I believe that it is in the interest of all the public works of this country, I believe it to be in the interest of Galveston Harbor, in the interest of the Saint John's River, in the interest of the Mississippi River, of Charleston, of Baltimore, of Philadelphia, of New York, of Boston, of Portland, and of all the great lakes that this bill should fail here and now. If it does fail here, if the Senate says to the other branch we shall not consider a bill sent to us in this manner, then the House will hereafter give us time for pause and consideration, and when another Congress shall meet, whether it shall be in December or within thirty days, then I think any committee of either House having this matter in charge will take it up in entirely a different temper and spirit from that which they have exercised in preparing this measure, and they will come to view these great works in their proper light, and when they make appropriations they will be made properly.

Mr. President, can we not adopt the plan followed by our near neighbors across the border in Canada? When any great public work there is devised and money is appropriated for it, there is appropriated at one time sufficient to furnish and complete the work. If it should be discovered that it required $20,000,000 to complete any harbor in that country and the engineers could use but $5,000,000 per annum, the appropriation would be for $20,000,000 to be used at the rate of $5,000,000 per annum. Then the work could go with speed and with proper consideration for economy, and such appropriations as that would be in my judgment wise and economical.

It is not the amount of money carried in this bill which forms the objection to it. The amount of money carried in this bill is not one-third of what it should be for the great harbors and rivers of this country. The waste, the absolute waste of this measure is that it gives out the money in dribbles to great works. It gives it out in such dribbles that it barely maintains the work.

We have been working at Galveston Harbor now for a number of years, I do not know just how many. We have increased the depth of water over the bar I think three inches by the last measurement. If we shall go on with the appropriations here to be made in this way, the successor of the Senator from Texas, or his successor in the third or fourth generation, will be in his seat before a steamship drawing thirty feet of water can cross the bar at Galveston Harbor. Nothing can be done in this way.

The Republic of France appropriates in round numbers $20,000,000 for her rivers and harbors, but when she wants to make a great improvement she puts down the money in an appropriation bill for the whole thing and orders it to be done in the shortest time possible. That is economy; that is wisdom; that is business. If any business man wanted to improve his plant, if any great railroad corporation wanted to improve its plant in order that it might do its business more profitably and cheaply, it would make its improvements at once. It would not make them as we are making these appropriations.

I say then the time has come to call a halt in appropriations for rivers and harbors, and to set ourselves to work in this body and in the other branch of the Legislature to see if we can not revolutionize the entire system of making these appropriations. Let us take up the great public works, many of which I have mentioned and many others quite as important which I have not mentioned, and see to it if we can not devise means by which they shall be pushed to rapid completion. For instance, if the depth of water over the bar at New York could be increased from twenty-four feet to thirty feet, it would save to the farmers of the West more in one year than all the money which has been appropriated for rivers and harbors in the past four or five years. So with the other great ports of our country.

I am not making any attack upon the smaller ports or upon the less important points. They are undoubtedly necessary to their people. No bill probably will pass which does not carry wise and just appropriations for smaller rivers and for smaller harbors; but in making this distribution I hold it to be necessary for the good of the whole country that these appropriations should be made in such a way and in such a manner as to enable these great works to be prosecuted rapidly to completion. Otherwise we are constantly losing the interest upon the money put into them. We get no benefit from the moneys thus expended until the work is substantially completed.

Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a few moments longer upon this question. I hold that if this bill should fail here by the action of the Senate, the Senate can in no way be held responsible to the country for the failure of a proper river and harbor bill. I believe there is not a Senator upon this floor who has not had from his constituents numerous applications by commercial bodies to be heard upon this measure, and to be heard upon new appropriations proposed to it. For one I have had a large number of communications from the people of my State asking to be heard upon the river and harbor bill, suggesting amendments and improvements over the action of last year. I have said to them all, when the river and harbor bill is properly before the committee the committee will hear you and will decide upon the claim which you may propose. What is to be the answer now that I shall give to my constituents? That the river and harbor bill came into our hands forty-eight hours before the final adjournment of Congress, and that this body, equal in power in the legislation of this country, yielded all its rights of amendment, all its rights of consideration in the committee, that it denied its doors and its committee-room to the people of this country who desired to be heard upon it, and that we took this bill ready-made to our hands.

It can not be argued that if this bill shall fail the great public works upon our rivers and harbors will suffer for repairs or by damage by the storms or elements. The river and harbor act of last year in section 4, as read to this body a short time ago by the Senator from Maine, shows that the Secretary of War has absolute power to maintain all the present works in their entirety and to repair any and all damage which may be done to them by the elements. Therefore the argument that if we fail to pass this bill the public works will greatly suffer by damage, by decay, falls to the ground; there is absolutely nothing in it.

I repeat that I believe it to be in the interest of the improvement of our great public works that this bill should fail. If I did not so believe I should be compelled to give it my assent, for I hold that no one of the great States of this Union is so much interested in the improvements of rivers and harbors as my own State, the State of New York. There is not a dollar of all the money carried in these bills to be properly and wisely expended upon any river throughout the entire length and breadth of this country which does not bring an immediate profit to the State of New York. We send our ships to every port upon the Atlantic coast, upon the Gulf, and upon the Pacific; we send our commerce and our produce to every port upon the great lakes, and whatever is done by Congress to improve these great water ways and these great harbors brings profit to the commercial interests of the State of New York.

The advancement of the interests of commerce has made the Erie Canal absolutely free. It has demanded, however, and has asked through its Legislature this winter, that Congress shall provide for the building of the Hennepin Canal. I believe that to be a wise recommendation to this body. I believe that that work should be done by the Federal Government. Certainly the State of New York, after having expended more than $60,000,000 on the Erie Canal and having made it free to the commerce of the country, has a right to ask that other great works which shall be a benefit to the whole people shall be prosecuted by the Federal Government. It has done this. It has asked through its Legislature for many other important works.

Resolutions have come to me as one of the representatives of that State. Shall my answer be that, as Senator from the State of New York, I consented to the passage of a river and harbor bill without giving it thirty minutes' consideration in the committee, without being able to add any item of appropriation to it, without hearing any of the delegates of the great commercial bodies of the city of New York upon the necessity of deepening the water over the bar at the entrance of New York Harbor?

Shall I give that answer to my constituents? Mr. President, I can not. I stand here, though I say it with great regret, opposed to this bill; for hitherto I have supported these bills. I have labored for a proper river and harbor bill at all times, and I regret that this bill did not come to us in time at this session of Congress in order that the Committee on Commerce might give it careful consideration, and that every section and portion of our country might be heard, and properly heard and properly cared for.

I believe, then, that this bill should fail for the best interests of the whole country. I believe it should fail for the interests of this body, if hereafter we are to exercise our just right and control in the public legislation of this country.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8279) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHN HANCOCK of Texas, Mr. WILLIAM H. FORNEY of Alabama, and Mr. WILLIAM D. WASHBURN of Minnesota managers at the conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 114) to provide for printing the annual reports of the Smithsonian Institution.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 347) to provide for the printing of additional copies of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs on the investigation of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 754) for the relief of Nathan H. Dunphe, of Bridgewater, in the State of Massachusetts; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the message from the House in reference to the fortification bill be now laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8279) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the presiding officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER subsequently said: The Chair substitutes the Senator from Kansas, Mr. PLUMB, for the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] as a conferee upon the part of the Senate upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the fortification appropriation bill.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 27, 28, 74.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 110, 111, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out section 11 of the bill of the House and insert the following in lieu thereof, to wit:

"That immediately upon and after the date of the passage of this act all Indians committing against the person or property of another Indian or other person any of the following crimes, namely, murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, arson, burglary, and larceny, within any Territory of the United States, and either within or without an Indian reservation, shall be subject therefor to the laws of such Territory relating to said crimes, and shall be tried therefor in the same courts and in the same manner, and shall be subject to the same penalties, as are all other persons charged with the commission of said crimes respectively. And the said courts are hereby given jurisdiction in all such cases. And all such Indians committing any of the above crimes against the person or property of another Indian, or other person, within the boundaries of any State of the United States, and within the limits of any Indian reservation, shall be subject to the same laws, tried in the same courts and in the same manner, and subject to the same penalties as are all other persons committing any of the above crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

H. L. DAWES,
P. B. PLUMB,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
E. JOHN ELLIS,
WM. S. HOLMAN,
THOMAS RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VEST. As I understand the report—

Mr. DAWES. The Senator does not want to make his motion until after the report is concurred in.

Mr. VEST. No, I do not want to make my motion now, but I want to understand the report. As I understand it the House recedes from all its amendments except what is known as the Oklahoma amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. DAWES. That is correct.

Mr. VEST. There was so much talking I could not hear the reading of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. DAWES. I will state the condition of the bill at this time. On this last conference report the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 27 and 28 in reference to the Otoe and Omaha Indians, and also the North Carolina appropriation. The House recedes from its disagreement with the Senate in all of the legislative matter except the one called the crimes act. In that they agree with the Senate with an amendment which has been read and concurred in. There is nothing now open except the amendment of the Senate striking out the provision called the Oklahoma matter, and upon that the two committees propose to take again the judgment of their respective bodies.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate recede from that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 112.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Amendment No. 112 is to strike out section 10, as follows:

SEC. 10. That the President is hereby authorized to open negotiations with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees for the purpose of opening to settlement under the homestead laws the unassigned lands in said Indian Territory ceded by them respectively to the United States by the several treaties of August 11, 1866, March 21, 1868, and July 19, 1866; and for that purpose the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; his action hereunder to be reported to Congress.

Mr. DAWES. I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate a single moment except merely to state this case. The proposition in the bill is to open negotiations with the Indians in the Indian Territory for the session of this land.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the House proposition.

Mr. DAWES. That is the House proposition. The Senate have stricken out that proposition. The conferees on the part of the Senate have been from the beginning willing to take that proposition if there would be annexed to it a provision to keep people off from that land until the negotiation is consummated. To that the House conferees refused to agree, and the question is whether we shall open negotiations for that Territory under circumstances such as were described here this afternoon, that will invite thousands of people down there in advance to take possession of that land, so that when the title become ours there will not be left a foot of it for an honest homesteader.

All that the conferees on the part of the Senate ask is that a provision shall go along with the negotiation which shall keep trespassers and marauders and lawbreakers from the land. If the negotiation has an honest purpose, a purpose in an honest way to extinguish the Indian title and open up to homesteaders that land, I can not understand why any one objects to keeping trespassers off it until the honest homesteader can go and take his land. I do not understand why it is that people insist upon the negotiation but refuse to keep the land from the trespasser while the negotiation is going on. If the House provision remains in the bill, when the negotiation shall have been consummated there will be five men already there for every one hundred and sixty acres of land.

Mr. BROWN. Is the provision just read the House proposition?

Mr. DAWES. The provision just read is the House proposition and the Senate struck it out. The Senate conferees offered to take it provided there was added to it the provision which has passed the Senate twice, making trespass upon the Indian lands a misdemeanor, declaring that until these men can lawfully go upon this land it shall be a misdemeanor for them unlawfully to enter upon it and take possession of it.

The whole trouble has arisen from the fact that the existing law has only imposed a fine upon trespassers upon the Indian land, and this man Payne and this man Couch have gone on there with their followers, making their followers believe that they could obtain homesteads there, and when the United States has taken them to Fort Smith and imposed the fine upon Payne and upon Couch they would take the poor debtor's oath the next day, and turn around and go to Kansas and in a week have another body of deluded men ready to go down there. They have gone through with that ceremony week after week and month after month, and the President in his messages has asked Congress to make it a misdemeanor. The Senate has twice passed that proposed law, and all that the conferees on the part of the Senate ask is that that shall be a part of the negotiation. Yet those who claim that their only desire is to fairly negotiate to open this land to the honest settler refuse to give the honest settler a chance, and I cannot understand how it is.

Mr. VEST. Suppose the conferees on the part of the Senate succeed in striking out the provision which was placed in the bill by the House of Representatives, what is the condition then of this Oklahoma question? It is exactly in the condition it has been in for the last five years, subjected annually to these raids on the part of these lawless and desperate men. What do we propose ourselves if we strike out the provision of the House and force this legislation, as the Senator from Massachusetts would have it? Do we make this thing any better? Does he give us any remedy? Does he stop these lawless raids?

Mr. DAWES. I will state to the Senator that we propose the remedy, but those who want this provision of the House refuse to take the remedy along with it.

Mr. VEST. I have never from the beginning of this discussion six years ago failed to declare that those people had no right to go into that territory. I offered the first resolution which was offered in the Senate which is now embodied in the bill reported by the Senator from Massachusetts and for which I voted, declaring that these raids were unlawful, in violation of the statutes and in violation of the treaties made with the Indians.

Mr. DAWES. I understand the Senator to take that position. I have no complaint to make of the Senator's position, but I do not understand why those who insist upon the negotiation without the remedy say that all they want is to give the honest homesteader a chance. He would have no chance.

Mr. VEST. I hold that it is wise statesmanship to take the best you can get. We can not force the House of Representatives, and I am not here to argue that question. We can not force them, it seems, to give up this provision. They adhere to it; and now the alternative is presented to us to let this thing stay as it is or to attempt a partial remedy when we can not achieve a complete one. Couch and his men, who now lead this desperate invasion into that Territory, assert that there is no Indian title to the land. We assert upon the contrary that there is one. The provision of the House of Representatives says that there is an Indian title, and says we shall treat these Indians fairly and purchase whatever right they may have. Is there nothing in that? For the life of me I can not understand how the provision of the House invites them to go into that Territory.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] stood here to-day and told us that 20,000 armed men were hovering upon the border of Oklahoma ready to go in upon the 5th of March, and yet we are to do nothing. When we say to those people there is an Indian title, when the Congress of the United States says by the House provision you must wait until we have negotiated with the Indians and purchased their title, how is it possible that we invite immigration? Does anybody suppose that if we do nothing those men will stay out of that Territory? Do we not know, did not the Senator from Kansas himself declare on this floor that unless we passed the provision of the House, those people are ready and are claiming that the new administration would protect them in this lawless invasion of the territory of Oklahoma?

Mr. President, if we recede from the amendment we simply assert what is the law, and if those people then go in they go in over the United States Army. After all, it is not the law of Congress, it is the armed force of the country that must keep them out. They propose to go. They propose to resist this Army. They were ready during the past winter to resist it and nothing drove them out except famine. If General Hatch had risked an engagement he would have found that those men would have willingly gone into battle with his troops, but the unusual inclemency and rigor of the winter, unparalleled before in that latitude, and the want of provisions drove those people out. Now we are told, as we have been told for six years, "Let this thing alone; let those people go; can not we still keep the Army there; can not we fully rely on the Army?"

All I propose is to start in the right direction by extinguishing the Indian title. I am in favor of using as much force as any Senator on this floor in order to preserve the peace and see that the laws of the United States are respected and enforced; but I say if you can not get the full remedy, take all that is possible; and unless we take the remedy the House proposes we get nothing.

Mr. MAXEY. I can not see why it is that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who is the Senator in charge of the Indian appropriation bill, should object so strenuously to the action of the House proposed to be stricken out by the Senate. It is conceded by him, it is conceded by all, that this country, which formerly belonged to the Creeks, the Cherokees, and Seminoles, and which is assigned and specified in the clause inserted in the bill by the House, is unnecessary for the Indians and ought to be used for homestead purposes. The Senator in charge of the bill states that; the Senator from Missouri states that.

Now, why should this provision be stricken out? Whatever title, if there be any left in the Cherokees, the Creeks, and the Seminoles, the provision proposes that the United States shall acquire by a fair and lawful treaty. The Senator from Massachusetts does not object to that, he says, but he thinks the provision should go further and embrace a clause laying a heavy penalty upon those who enter into that country. That is his objection to it. If the Senate does not recede and this paragraph is stricken out what becomes of his proposed amendment? As the Senator from Missouri has well said, you leave things in the exact condition they have been in for the last six years, and which has caused such great disturbance.

But has not the Government of the United States the power now to get those people out? It has been proven conclusively during the present session of Congress that this Territory is not subject at public or private sale to entry for homestead or any other purpose. It is conceded that it is unlawful for any one to enter upon or attempt to occupy that country. That is conceded everywhere. If it be unlawful now for that to be done, it is the duty of the President, in the faithful execution of the laws, to keep all persons out. That he has done, and the strong arm of this Government properly exercised can continue to do that. In the mean time here is a lawful measure not to deprive the Indians, if they have any right, of that right by a lawless method, but a fair and honorable proposition to invest the President of the United States with the lawful power to enter into negotiation to acquire whatever title those Indians may have.

In my judgment the provision of the House is a proposition in the interest of peace; it is a proposition in the interest of the Indians. It is a proposition which, carried into operation, will produce the very effect which the Senator from Massachusetts says he desires to produce; it will open up this vast country to settlement by honest, upright, hard-working people who seek homes.

It is idle for any man to close his eyes and say that that great country unoccupied by a human being should be kept for all time to come in that situation when there are so many laboring, toiling, poor men anxious to secure a home for themselves, their wives, and their children. It should be done, and it is in the book of fate that it shall be done, and if done let it be done lawfully. The House have so provided. The provision of the House is a wise provision.

But the Senator from Massachusetts has changed front on this Indian bill since the other day. When some of us wanted to have depredations committed by these Indians paid for he insisted that it should not be done. He said that was legislation on an appropriation bill and a violation of the rule of the Senate. Now he comes forward and proposes legislation upon this same appropriation bill, just as in the same bill he proposed legislation pointing out a new mode and method for settling for those depredations, still insisting when the other side wanted legislation that that was a violation of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. President, it would be a wise thing to do as proposed by the House, and for one, detesting lawlessness in every shape and form, having no sympathy with these boomers in any sense of the word, having no sympathy with lawlessness in any sense of the word, I say here is a lawful method pointed out for a peaceable settlement of this difficulty, and in the mean time the power of the Government is ample to protect that country. The Senator from Kansas himself stated that there was not a single head of stock in all that Oklahoma country belonging to a white man, and the charge that this country was sought to be held up and kept for the Western cattle-men is untrue in fact, for there are no cattle there and no cattle-men there.

The Secretary of the Interior states that no contract has ever been made for that country. That is a matter of official note. So these stories designed and intended to enable men by the strong arm to go in there and unlawfully hold that country are not true. The Government has had the power to keep them out. The Government has exercised that power and exercised it wisely. Take your 20,000 men in buckram—at least I presume those to be so who are talking about going in there on a raid in forty-eight hours—and I venture to say that the President of the United States will keep off those men. If this measure is passed as it was designed to be passed a peaceful and lawful acquisition of the entire title of those Indians will be obtained by the President of the United States. Then the country will be opened out for homestead purposes and be in a thriving, a prosperous, and a habitable condition, occupied by men who have acquired their homes by honest and lawful obedience to the law and by the exercise of honest industry.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will recede from that. We have heard a great deal said about the course of the House, and many criticisms have been made upon it here. What is this? Here is a proposition, a lawful proposition, and the attempt is to drive the House of Representatives into doing that which they tell you they will not do. Can you drive them any more than they can drive you? No. You ought to put something more in the provision, it is said; that is all. You want to increase, in other words, the penalty which now exists by law. There is a penalty now. The act forbidden is unlawful now. You want to increase the penalty, because you assume that which is not true, that the Government has not both the will and the power to protect that country. It has both the will and the power. It has done it hitherto successfully, and it will do it again. Adopt this, and the title of the Indians is extinguished honestly and lawfully for a sufficient consideration paid them from the Government, and then the country will be opened to homesteads, and the great object, which the Senator from Massachusetts says he desires, that these lands shall be secured to citizens for homestead purposes, is accomplished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that the Senate recede from its amendment?

Mr. DAWES. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Chair state the question again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that the Senate recede from its amendment to the Indian appropriation bill.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON].

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 347) to provide for the printing of additional copies of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs on the investigation of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 100) authorizing the printing of certain naval and military reports.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 342) to authorize the printing of 400,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1885.

THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8280) making appropriations for the preservation and continuation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONGER. I have but one or two remarks to make in reply to the statements which were made first by the Senator from Vermont—

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Michigan to yield.

Mr. CONGER. I should have been through with my few remarks if other Senators would stop talking, and when I say a few words I shall yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend until gentlemen resume their seats in the rear of the bar of the Senate and Senators resume their proper seats and cease loud conversation.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I should like very well, if time would permit and the patience of the Senate would allow it, to discuss still further some of the propositions which have been made by the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from New York; but the Senator from New York did so happily put his opposition to this bill into an argument in its favor, in every sentence he uttered showing the necessity of an increase of the amount of the appropriation in this bill, that I was thankful to him with humble reverence for having done better and made a more forcible and effective speech in favor of my bill in the desperate energy with which he opposed it than I could do it. So much for the Senator from New York.

With the Senator from Vermont I have another question to settle. The father of the Senate, the man to whom I look with upturned eyes, when he is standing, and to whom I bow with reverence when he is sitting, the embodiment of truth, the perfection of all comity and fair-dealing, tells the Senate that the estimates for river and harbor appropriations this year are only $8,000,000. He is not here, or else I should say some pleasant things in regard to him. I have in my hand the Book of Estimates submitted to Congress on the 1st of December, and here are the items of the river and harbor bill that were then estimated for, the amount estimated as necessary and proper to carry on the works for this year, and the footing is $34,507,630 instead of $8,000,000. Added to those are over five millions of estimates sent in as special estimates from the Engineer Department by the Secretary of War, making the total estimates for these very works, rivers and harbors, for this year's bill, over $40,000,000 instead of $8,000,000.

I enter into no controversy with the Senator from Vermont. I know he must have inadvertently and unadvisedly made this statement, that in his zeal to attack this bill and to belittle it he found somewhere in the Book of Estimates, at the end of some calculation, the figures $8,000,000, and he thought they applied to rivers and harbors. I do not believe he would misrepresent by one cent's worth the amount of any estimate or of any appropriation. I believe it would be impossible for him knowingly or willfully to do anything of that kind, but it is none the less due that I should say to the Senate that here [exhibiting] is the Book of Estimates, and if they will look on the one hundred and sixty-ninth page they will find the footing of the estimates for river and harbor appropriations necessary for this year, and they amount to over $34,000,000.

Now, sir, I shall not detain the Senate by further remarks. I should like to have an expression of the sentiment of the Senate. I should like to know it as early as possible, that I, too, may take my rest as the others do. If the Senate decline to take further consideration of this bill, if they are ready to tell the country that all these great improvements shall languish, shall die, I want to know it. If the Senate are ready to-night or at any other time to say that these works which have done more to extend population and immigration and improvement and to build up our country clear through from the Atlantic to the Rocky Mountains than all other means put together, I want to know it. Beginning with our Atlantic harbors and threading up the streams and the rivers and the lakes far up even to the Yellowstone and to the foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains this system has proceeded; and on the other side there are the improvements of the Columbia and the Snake which make the means of communication between the Pacific and the interior portions of the Atlantic slope, thus becoming for a year or for ten years or for fifty years the means of unheard progress and comfort and growth and prosperity to the people and of cheapness of transportation and the means of immigration into the vast unsettled regions which yet demand assistance.

The Senate of course can do it if they choose. I have no other interest in it than the rest of the Senate. I thank God that around the State in which I live are the deep waters of the great lakes. From the center outward of the two peninsulas of Michigan there are distances to be traversed by land of but one hundred miles, or forty miles, or twenty miles, or ten miles, or five miles to reach the borders of these lakes, and we have communication by short railroads and by great lakes by which we can go out from our beautiful State into all the surrounding world with our products cheaper than similar products can be brought from the interior States of the West. And yet we need constant improvement, and we have the expense of the transportation of our products reduced one-half by the very bills which have been passed from year to year, and the prosperity which we have received is beginning to be felt in all the Southern States in the regions where there are no railroads. Such rivers as the Tennessee and the Cumberland and the Warrior and all those streams that glide through the interior parts of those States, as well as the great water courses, are gradually being opened up, until produce and coal and iron, which are found in abundance in Georgia and Alabama and on these minor streams, the Tennessee and the Cumberland and other rivers, can now be transported to market and have a value where ten years ago the coal-mines themselves were utterly worthless, because the black diamonds slept in the hills and there was no way of transporting them to market.

But, sir, I do not design to dwell upon this subject. I say now, once for all, all that I desire to say. By the order of the Committee on Commerce I have reported the bill to the Senate. By their action, whether wise or unwise, such amendments have been proposed to the bill as that committee thought proper; and every member of the committee has been for years conversant with every single appropriation that has been heretofore made, and has read the great text-books of the engineers page by page, report by report, not only of the principal engineers in charge, but of every one of their assistants. Members of the committee know all these and have read them as a child would read his hornbook. They are not ignorant of these works.

The Senator from New York could draw with his pencil on paper, so often has he looked over these reports and so often has he studied them, a plan of all these improvements, and, if his memory served him, he could put down the amounts appropriated each year and the improvements made each year. He talks about little streams. Sir, the Mississippi River in its grand, magnificent flow is the result of the million little rills and creeks and rivers and streams that flow from all that great empire of the Mississippi Valley. They unite and form the magnificent Father of Waters. So with commerce: commencing in the little rills, flowing into larger streams of commerce, it swells and grows in its progress to the markets of the world until it becomes the grand, magnificent commerce of the United States of America, unequalled in all the broad world; for there is no internal and coastwise commerce of any nation on the globe, fed as it is by the little streams from the counties and the States of this Union, that compares in grandeur and magnificence and benefit to the people at large with the commerce of our country.

We can smother it, but we can not dam up the big streams; we can not by words, even by the speeches of the Senator from New York, powerful as his speeches are and gigantic as his lungs are, split off the rocks. To make Hell Gate navigable takes time; it takes blasting of rocks; it takes penetrating into the cavernous recesses of Hallet's Point to blow away those obstructions; and the Senator is impatient that we can not remove these rocks in a year; he is impatient that we can not make appropriations enough to deepen the bar at the lower entrance of New York Harbor to thirty or thirty-two feet in a year. We commenced it for him; we gave him liberal appropriations for it.

I do not like to say that it was mean in him to talk as he has spoken about this bill. I would say of myself, without fear of contradiction, that because Hallet's Point has not appropriation enough in this bill, and because the outer harbor and the bar at Sandy Hook do not have appropriation enough in this bill, I oppose it, if I opposed it as he does; but I will not say it of the Senator from New York. I believe he is moved by higher motives than I dare ascribe to myself. It is the good of the whole country, the grandeur of the great streams of commerce and great rivers to be improved, that are the cause of the unconcern with which he looks on the humble, feeble things in this way which contribute to the great whole. It is that which makes him oppose this bill.

Now, Mr. President—

Mr. ALLISON rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. I have not asked the Senator to yield.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Iowa is one of those men to whom I am compelled to yield, because he is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I want a thing or two in the appropriation bills sometimes. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. I am very much obliged to the Senator. I wish to make a report from the Senate conference on House bill 8256, being the sundry civil appropriation bill.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator submit a report from a conference committee?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the sundry civil bill, House bill 8256.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

Managers on the part of the Senate.
SAM. J. RANDALL,
WILLIAM H. FORNEY,
THOMAS RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. As this is an important bill perhaps I should state briefly the amendments disagreed to.

It will be observed by looking at the bill that all the amendments of the Senate relating to public buildings have been disagreed to with three or four minor exceptions, those being the buildings in Alaska, and one or two merely verbal amendments with reference to other public buildings.

There is also a disagreement with reference to the survey of the Mexican boundary, and a disagreement with reference to the several propositions in the bill looking to the sale of property belonging to the Government.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Iowa whether the conference on the part of the Senate disagreed to the provisions of the House bill in relation to public buildings?

Mr. ALLISON. Unfortunately the bill is in such shape by the votes of the Senate that all the House provisions are beyond the control and direction of a committee of conference. Every provision I believe with reference to public buildings inserted in the bill originally by the House of Representatives was agreed to by the Senate; and I might add by way of suggestion to the Senator from Vermont that most of the amendments on this subject were put on in the Senate over the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations as originally reported in the bill.

With the exception of public buildings most of the other matters in dispute have been either compromised or adjusted. I could go into detail on several amendments, but I will not occupy the time of the Senate in doing so, though I shall be glad to answer any question that may be suggested by any Senator in reference to any amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS). Will the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference?

The report was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate further insist on the amendments left undisposed of by the conference report and ask a further conference with the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 8102) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a railroad bridge by the East and Middle Tennessee Railroad Company over the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers;

A bill (H. R. 8183) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Murdaugh, of Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. 653) for the relief of John B. Davis.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8280) making appropriations for the preservation and continuation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know whether the Senator from Michigan has concluded his remarks or not.

Mr. CONGER. I said, sir, that the estimates were $34,000,000 instead of $8,000,000. I have the record to show it. I mean the estimates of the engineers who by the law of Congress are required to report to Congress the estimates of the amount that, in the language of the law, can be profitably expended in each fiscal year on each of the uncompleted works mentioned. When these go to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is not supposed to know anything of these bills, he gives a lump estimate for rivers and harbors. His lump estimate is $8,000,000. The Secretary of War and the board of engineers, on whom we rely in regard to the river and harbor bill, say $34,000,000. I presume that is the explanation of the mistake of the Senator from Vermont. That is all I have to say.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I shall not undertake to detain the Senate by a general discussion of this subject at any great length, but I desire to say that I have been unable to see any substantial reason why this bill ought to pass. And it does seem to me that appropriating millions of dollars and spreading the money over places which have been surveyed and examined years ago is not the proper manner of legislation in disposing of such large sums of money collected from the people by taxation. I have been impressed since I have been in the Senate with the fact that every year the Congress of the United States is becoming less and less careful in the manner of appropriating money. There seems to me to be less disposition to deliberate, to consider and discriminate carefully in the consideration of such bills than there used to be years ago in the Congress of the United States. I believe it is true that this is the first time, for many years at least, that the Senate of the United States has been willing to come forward, or has shown any disposition to come forward, and pass a river and harbor bill appropriating five or ten million dollars in the lump, to be distributed on the basis of a pro rata distribution based upon a bill previously passed.

So far as I am concerned, while I am for rivers and harbors, while I believe and have always believed that it was important to the commerce and business interests of this country that the rivers and the lakes and the canals and the harbors surrounding and distributed through this country should all be cared for and improved, yet I do not believe that we ought to adopt the plan which has been suggested by this bill.

Then, sir, there is another thing. Even though the last river and harbor bill did not appropriate a sufficient amount of money to care for and keep in a state of repair all the rivers and harbors and canals, yet if Senators will refer to the law that we passed a year ago they will observe that there is a provision in that law which gives the Secretary of War absolute authority to any extent that may be necessary to expend whatever may be required in keeping in repair the rivers and harbors and canals that are mentioned in the law then passed. I am of the opinion that the Senate has not had its attention called to the fourth section of the law that we passed one year ago, and I desire to read it for the information of the Senate:

SEC. 4. That no tolls or operating charges whatsoever shall be levied or collected upon any vessel or vessels, dredges, or other passing water-craft through any canal or other work for the improvement of navigation belonging to the United States; and for the purpose of preserving and continuing the use and navigation of said canals, rivers, and other public works without interruption, the Secretary of War, upon the application of the chief engineer in charge of said works, is hereby authorized to draw his warrant or requisition from time to time upon the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the actual expenses of operating and keeping said works in repair.

That provision of law gives the Secretary of War absolute power without stint, without limit as to amount, with nothing upon which to base his action under this section except the report of the engineer. I say that for every single piece of work that is mentioned in the law of 1884 the Secretary of War can draw upon the Treasury of the United States for whatever amount of money is needed for the purpose of keeping the rivers, canals, and harbors, the public works mentioned in that law, in absolute and perfect repair. If that is true and that is the letter of the law, I submit to the honorable Senator from Michigan and to every other Senator on this floor whether so far as relates to the question of keeping in repair these works, which have been the burden of the argument of gentlemen in favor of this bill, there is any occasion for its passage at all, because I say under section 4 of the law we passed last year the Secretary of War has a right to draw from the Treasury millions of dollars, if he chooses to do so, where the engineers say the money is needed, in order to keep those public works in repair.

Then I insist that so far as that argument goes there is no necessity for this new bill which has been brought in here, passed by the House of Representatives, appropriating $5,000,000, and doubled by the committee of the Senate, making it $10,000,000, placing it in the hands of the Secretary of War to be distributed pro rata under the law of last year. So far as concerns the repair and preservation of the works, there is no occasion for the bill at all, not one single iota of need for it, as I insist.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Senator yield to me to answer?

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to the Senator answering now.

Mr. CONGER. Section 4 of last year's act provides:

That no tolls or operating charges whatsoever shall be levied or collected upon any vessel or vessels, dredges, or other passing water-craft through any canal or other work for the improvement of navigation belonging to the United States—

No toll collected—and for the purpose of preserving and continuing the use and navigation of said canals, rivers, and other public works without interruption, the Secretary of War, upon the application of the chief engineer in charge of said works, is hereby authorized to draw his warrant or requisition from time to time upon the Secretary of the Treasury to pay—the actual expenses of operating and keeping said works in repair.

What?—

Who operates a lake, who operates a river? Canals are operated by locks. It is only such kind of works as are operated by laborers employed on them that this provision applies to.

Mr. CULLOM. This provision of the law provides that all the public works shall be kept in preservation by the Secretary of War, or he has the right to do it under this law.

Mr. CONGER. "Said works," not all works.

Mr. CULLOM. The law says—

Mr. CONGER. "Said public works." That is, canals—

Mr. CULLOM.

And for the purpose of preserving and continuing the use and navigation of said canals, rivers, and other public works.

What does that mean? That means any other public works that are mentioned in the law of 1884.

Mr. CONGER. Works that are operated.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not care whether a public work is upon the coast or upon Lake Michigan, whether it is a canal or the Mississippi River improvement, if it is a public work mentioned in the law of 1884, and if it needs preservation, if it needs repair, the Secretary of War has a right to draw his warrant upon the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed by law to pay it; and the Secretary of War is authorized under that statute to spend twice as much as is proposed by the liberal Committee on Commerce of the Senate when they come into the Senate, after a half-hour's consideration of the bill, and report a measure doubling up what the other branch sends over to us to be appropriated.

Sir, I insist that there is no occasion for any bill being passed at all this year so far as the preservation of the public works is concerned, and the burden of the speech of the Senator from Michigan who brings this bill in here is that unless we appropriate $10,000,000—not five, but ten millions—the public works of this country are going to wreck and ruin.

Now, sir, while I am in favor of harbors and their improvement and enlargement where necessary, while I desire to see the Mississippi River improved and cleared out so far as its navigation is concerned, so that steamboats upon that river can run with safety, while I am in favor of the improvement of whatever harbors there may be upon the lakes or the coast, yet I am not willing as one Senator, however much my own State may be interested in the subject, to come in here and support this sort of omnibus bill appropriating $10,000,000 without any consideration whatever from the Senate committee or from anybody else so far as the Senate knows.

I say, sir, it is an unheard of thing for a Senate committee to bring in a bill of this kind with scarcely a moment's consideration of it, and then double up the amount the other branch of Congress has sent to us. Not only that; but other Senators have referred to another feature in connection with this subject. This bill, as I have said, and as every other member who has talked about it has said, appropriates money based upon the law of 1884. In other words, the harbors, the canals, the rivers on which money was to be spent by the law of 1884, where the works are not completed, are to get their pro rata share of the $10,000,000 proposed to be appropriated by this bill. Another committee of this Congress which has sat and investigated this subject for three months we are told—or at least I find that statement in the RECORD—after deliberate investigation, after months of investigation, after reading and rereading perhaps the reports of the engineers and of the Secretary of War upon this question, concluded that there was no propriety in appropriating for a portion of the places that are specified in the law of 1884. I find a list in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD upon this subject of a river and harbor bill, and it is to be read in connection with the remarks made by a distinguished member of Congress of the United States, who said:

I submit to the House a list of the forty-three public works to which I refer.

These public works are works which a committee of the Congress of the United States has determined after investigation ought not to have any more moneys spent upon them at all; and yet under this bill, if we pass it, those different places as well as others get their pro rata of the $10,000,000 we are sending out to them to be expended. Here are forty-three works where, under the law of 1884, we are to go on making expenditures of money after a committee of Congress have investigated the subject until they have become thoroughly satisfied, and they say that in all those places there should be no more money spent; and yet in our liberality we come in here with a bill of $10,000,000 and we propose to give them the money, to place the money in the hands of the Secretary of War, as one Senator has stated, without qualification and making it obligatory upon him to spend the money in these places, and yet after thorough investigation it is decided by an honorable committee that has the subject in charge in the Congress of the United States that no one of them ought to have a single dollar this year.

Is that the way to legislate the people's money out of their pockets? Ought we not to take our stand and say and declare to the country that we will not make these great appropriations of five or ten million dollars without knowing for what the money is to be spent, and whether in the interest of the public it ought to be spent at the places where it is to be spent?

I repeat again that I am in favor of appropriations for rivers and harbors and canals, and all the water-way improvements of the country where the National Government rightfully under the Constitution ought to take hold of them and make the improvements necessary. I believe for one, as the honorable Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], I think, stated to-night, that it was one of the most potent means of controlling the question of transportation in this country, cheapening transportation in the interest of the great mass of the people of the country who are to be fed, and who have to buy the goods and products of the producers of the land.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to draw his attention to the proviso at the end of the clause?

Provided, That no more shall be thus allotted than is sufficient for the completion of said works under the present estimates.

I want to know of him if he understands that by this provision any of these works can get any more money than is necessary to complete them. None of these old works that are not embraced in the present estimates can get a dollar.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that if a work is completed according to the original estimates and the original design, the Secretary of War can not spend any more money there; but if a committee or the Congress of the United States should determine that the enterprise was not one that ought to be prosecuted further and the people's money spent in improving it further, the Secretary of War has no discretion in the premises, but he must go on and complete the work whether it ought to be done or not—even though in the judgment of the standing committee of the Congress of the United States it should stop—unless we succeed in passing a law to stop it. That is the trouble about this bill. We start in here upon the idea that the law we passed last year was perfect, that it was right in all its provisions and particulars, and that we ought to follow it up and make whatever appropriations are necessary to carry out the original design in connection with each one of the places named, while the fact is that it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to examine actually every one of these places, these harbors or canals or rivers or whatever they may be, and see whether it is the duty of Congress to make any further appropriation or not. We do not do it for the sake of getting rid of work. I do not say that with any reference to our honorable committee in the Senate, because they have had no opportunity of considering this bill, I know very well, as the bill only came to them yesterday or the day before, and they could do but one of two things: one was to report the bill as they have done, perhaps without adding to it another $5,000,000, and the other, was to report what I think they ought to have done, that they had not had time to consider such a bill as ought to be passed and therefore report against any river and harbor bill during the present session of Congress. That would be my idea of it; but the honorable committee have done what they thought was best, I have no doubt, and I have no fault to find with them, but I do not agree with them.

But I say, Mr. President, that it seems to me the time has come, and I know of no better time than this very year 1885, at the close of this short session of Congress, for the Senate of the United States to say, and say unqualifiedly, that we will not pass a river and harbor bill appropriating $10,000,000 unless we are given time to investigate every item of it and see whether what we are doing is right or wrong; but if it goes over, and if that provision that I read were not in the law and the works had to stand still, if you please, for six or eight or ten months, until the next session of Congress, we would still be acting wisely, and the people would see the fact that we were not in a condition to determine this great question in the twenty-four hours left us, and that we insisted upon what every man in this nation, in my opinion, should insist upon, that no such bill as this ought to pass appropriating this much money unless we had more knowledge of what we were doing in reference to it.

The Senator from Michigan insists that there are $34,000,000 estimated for appropriations for rivers and harbors and canals, &c. The Senator from Vermont insists as I understand it—and I think he is correct about it—that while the estimates of the engineers scattered over these places, including little rivers and rivulets and harbors and lakes and canals, figure up $34,000,000, yet the Secretary of War, as I understand, only comes in here with estimates for $8,000,000. Is that so or not?

Mr. MORRILL. Let me read to the Senator the estimate. It seems that sometimes gentlemen who undertake to explain the estimates have not read the book. I understand the statement was made that the estimates for this year were $34,000,000. If the Senator who said that had looked at the heading and the notes he would have found this:

The following statement is not furnished as a part of the "annual estimates for the public service" required by the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Statutes, page 370), to be furnished by the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Treasury, but is inserted as a convenient and customary summary of items taken from the annual report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1884, showing, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1867 (14 Statutes, page 421), the amount that can be profitably expended in the next fiscal year "on each of the uncompleted works mentioned."

For the amount that can be profitably expended in the next fiscal year the Secretary only submits as his estimate for this year $8,000,000.

Mr. CULLOM. Now what is the situation? In the face of the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury we come in here and propose to give $10,000,000 in a lump without investigation, when the Secretary only recommends $8,000,000, and in the face of the fact, too, as has been stated, and I suppose correctly, that we have nearly $10,000,000 of the old appropriation under the law of 1884 on hand. That is the situation.

I submit whether, under this state of facts, we should rush headlong and make an appropriation of this sort without the investigation or consideration which I think it demands. I should like to see every dollar appropriated, I repeat, for every river, harbor, and canal, either inland, or on the lakes, or on the seashore, that is necessary to the public interest. I repeat that I am in favor of improving the rivers and I am in favor of improving the harbors on the lakes and on the seacoast, and I am in favor of digging canals wherever they may be necessary in the interest of the commerce of this country. I assert that the water ways of the country are, after all, the main reliance upon which the people of this country must depend in regulating the commerce of the country.

The Senate has had something to do this winter upon the question of regulating inland commerce. It was my privilege to bring in a bill here from the Committee on Railroads for that purpose. That bill went through the Senate of the United States after amendment, and I had hoped up to this hour almost that we might secure some legislation upon that subject which would secure some sort of control of the railroad transportation of the country. I suppose, however, that any bill upon that subject is going to fail for the present session. While that kind of legislation is, in my judgment, important in the interest of the people of the country, yet it is of as much importance that the water ways, the rivers, lakes, and canals of the country should be improved as well, because after all they are the regulators of the railroad companies of the country. The statistics show that during the period when we have lake transportation for instance from the West to the East, the rate of freights is very much cheaper than during the winter season when the lakes are closed with ice. I wish to give a brief statement upon that subject.

The gentleman who has been referred to frequently this winter in the discussions upon the subject of interstate commerce—I refer to Albert Fink, who is the great railroad man of the country; I do not mean as the owner, but who perhaps knows as much about the control and management of railroads as any other man in the nation—testifies that water transportation after all is the great regulator of the price of freights upon railroads. Let us see what the statistics show. The Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard has been at work during the past vacation a part of the time and during the present session of Congress collecting statistics upon this subject, a portion of which was submitted by the chairman of that committee this afternoon. In looking over those statistics I find that the average rate charged for wheat per bushel by the water routes from Chicago to New York for the period from May to December during the year 1883 was 9 cents; the average all-rail charge for the same period was 15 cents. The average all-rail charge for the period from January to April, which is during the winter months, and November and December, 1883, was 18 cents. The rate was 9 cents by water and 15 by all rail during the open season and 18 cents by all rail during the winter season of the year. In 1876 the averages were, respectively, 15.6 by water, while they were 25.8 by rail from January to April, and 18 cents from April to December.

These statistics show the importance to our people of improving the water ways of the country as a means of regulating commerce, or, in other words, regulating between the East and the West on the railroads the freight rates of our corn and wheat, our products and manufactures coming this way, and the goods and other articles which are manufactured in the East and transported to the West. So, no man can say that as a matter of fact the improvement of the water ways of the country is of no importance to the people of this country.

I insist that we ought to do everything that can be done in the direction of the improvement of the water ways and the harbors of the country, but I am not willing to fold my arms and vote for a bill appropriating $10,000,000 when, by the very testimony before the Senate, a portion of the money will be spent where it is not needed, and when, under the law which we passed last year, the Secretary of War has absolute power already to preserve the public works of the country from now on for all time so far as I know, or until that law is repealed.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate any longer.

Mr. FRYE. I move to lay the pending amendment on the table. The motion was not agreed to.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, within eleven hours the Forty-eighth Congress will terminate. There are upon the Calendar of the Senate a little over one hundred private pension bills.

I desire in this connection, while not strictly pertaining to the subject under consideration by the Senate, but with a view to making a motion, to give a report of the condition of the pension business of the Senate during this Congress.

The whole number of pension cases introduced during the Forty-eighth Congress was 1,294. Of these 571 were Senate bills, 611 were House bills, and 112 were petitions. There were 587 cases reported favorably—139 Senate bills, 439 House bills, and 9 petitions. There were reported adversely 410 cases—267 Senate bills, 104 House bills, and 39 petitions. The total number of reports amounts to 997—on Senate bills, 406; on House bills, 543; and on petitions, 48. During the Forty-sixth Congress the whole number of reports was 674, as compared with 997 during this Congress. In the Forty-seventh Congress the whole number of reports was 479. There are still undisposed of pending in the Committee on Pensions 165 Senate bills, 68 House bills, and 64 petitions—in all, 297. Of these 927 pending claims, there is evidence before that committee in only 50 of them.

I should state that since these figures were made, five or six additional reports have been submitted to the Senate, so that there have been more than 1,000 reports made from that committee. Of the 1,000 cases reported a little over one hundred remain undisposed of, and I think it is due to the claimants, it is due to the Senate, it is due to the House of Representatives, where these bills were considered, for every one of them is a House bill, that we now proceed to the consideration of those bills. Therefore, I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7718) restoring John Snyder to the pension-roll.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand the Senator to ask to proceed to the consideration of favorably reported House bills?

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to proceed to the consideration of this one particular bill; but if the Senate will consent I shall be very glad to go on with the favorably reported House bills in their order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. CONGER. If that motion is carried will it set aside the consideration of the river and harbor bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will.

Mr. CONGER. Then I desire to say—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not open to debate.

Mr. CONGER. I ask permission to make a remark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks permission to make an observation on the pending question, which is not debatable. Is there objection?

Mr. MITCHELL. If I may have an opportunity to reply, I shall have no objection; otherwise I must object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair can not make any bargains. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania object?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not disposed to object under the circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. CONGER. I have been anxious, and am still as anxious as any one can be, for the passage of the pension bills. I have offered repeatedly, if consent could be given, that the river and harbor bill should be set aside informally in order to take up the pension bills. The Senate has declined to do that. I have since learned from one of the clerks at the desk that all the House pension bills favorably reported have been enrolled on the supposition that they would not be amended; so that the hurry there was to pass those bills that they might be enrolled is removed, and I think we can go on with the river and harbor bill and dispose of it one way or the other.

Mr. FRYE. But at the present rate of speed we shall not get through with the bill until next March.

Mr. CONGER. We can vote on the bill, I suppose, one way or the other.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know about that.

Mr. CONGER. In order that these pension bills may be disposed of I will agree to do what I have offered to do heretofore at any time. If the Senate will consent to set aside the river and harbor bill informally and take up House pension bills favorably reported and proceed with their consideration, I shall make no objection. I myself have offered that the bill be laid aside informally and that the House pension bills be taken up.

Mr. MITCHELL. In view of the statement made by the Senator from Michigan, I will now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House pension bills reported favorably, laying aside the pending bill informally.

SIGNAL REGULATIONS AT SEA.

Mr. VEST. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. I believe it is the first time I have ever asked to make a statement out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. VEST. I deem it a public duty to ask the Senate, without reference to any other bill that is pending, to consider a bill reported from the Committee on Commerce, passed unanimously by the House, which places the ocean signal service of the United States in accord with that of the other maritime nations of the world. The State Department has particularly requested the passage of the bill. If it is not passed to-night, the result will be that the signals of our ships upon the ocean will be isolated and not in accord with those of other maritime nations.

It is in the interest of property and life. The bill has been standing back this entire session and part of the last session; I have never been able to get it up.

Mr. MITCHELL. I shall have no objection to the consideration of the bill to which the Senator refers, but after that is disposed of, I think if we can go on with the pension bills, all of us can get some favors of that kind and do everything that ought to be done.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to consider the bill to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Senate may now consider the bill (H. R. 5692) to adopt the Revised International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.

Mr. CONGER. Setting aside the river and harbor bill informally.

Mr. FRYE. Unanimous consent does that.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SEWELL. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that I have an important amendment to offer to the bill, one which I submitted to the Senator from Missouri some time ago. The bill leaves out an important provision which I desire to correct by offering a substitute for the second section. The amendment requires that sailing vessels shall give notice of their approach to a steamer or other vessel at night by the flash of a torch. That is a very important provision, owing to the fact that sailing vessels can not very well signal at night under international regulations. The regulations are made more with a view practically to steam service. I will read for the information of the Senate the syllabus of an important case decided by the Supreme Court lately, where a Norwegian bark was run down by the steamer Belgenland:

This reasoning, however, will not apply to the bark; those on board that vessel knew that their side lights were invisible to the steamer, because those of the steamer were invisible to them. They knew also that the steamer had not the knowledge of the vicinity of the bark, because the bark carried no masthead light.

The appearance of the steamer's masthead light alone was notice to them of the necessity of giving some warning by rocket, fog-horn, or flare-up light of the approach of the two vessels, and no attempt was made to notify the steamer. (The Milanes, 43 Law Times, N. S., page 107, a case which will be presently referred to.) This necessity created the statute which makes the exhibition of a torchlight obligatory, on American vessels, to steamers approaching at night. Under those circumstances the courts of this nation to which the owners of the Norwegian bark have applied for redress recognize, as a rule of reasonable precaution for safety at sea, that some action should be taken by the sailing vessel to notify an approaching steamer.

The statutes of this nation enforce by fine and penalty on their own vessels the precaution which safely requires. But the American statute did not create a new and an artificial rule like some adopted by common consent, which requires one or another of the vessels to give way or hold its course; but it enforces a precaution which experience has shown to be requisite to avoid collision at night.

The fine imposed by the American statute is not enforceable upon foreign vessels; but although its penalties can not be enforced against them, yet a foreigner who seeks redress in the courts of the United States submits that his conduct and that of the party impleaded shall be construed by those rules which that forum applies to the case.

I submit that as a decision of the Supreme Court, showing the absolute necessity to navigation on the high seas of retaining the provision. Therefore I offer as a substitute for the second section the following:

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any of the provisions of section 4234 of the Revised Statutes requiring all sail-vessels on the approach of any steam-vessel during the night-time to show a lighted torch upon the point or quarter to which such steam-vessel shall be approaching, and that all other laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the foregoing Revised International Rules and Regulations for the navigation of all public and private vessels of the United States upon the high seas and in all coast waters of the United States are hereby repealed, except as to the navigation of such vessels within the harbors, lakes, and inland waters of the United States; and that this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of September, A. D. 1884.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. VEST. The object of the bill reported by the Committee on Commerce is to do away with the very evil—for it is an evil—which is embodied in that amendment. At present we have a signal service upon the ocean which is confined to the United States alone. If the amendment should be adopted, it simply preserves a section of the Revised Statutes which provides for a signal which no other nation has. What the bill seeks to bring about is uniformity, and I can not better explain that than by reading a very brief communication from the Secretary of State:

On the 3d of October last a note was received by this Department from Hon. J. S. Sackville West, Her Britannic Majesty's minister at this capital, announcing that the international regulations for preventing collisions at sea, which have been adopted by all the leading maritime powers of the world except this country, came into force on the 1st day of September last.

As the statutes of the United States regulating the sailing of American vessels conflict in important particulars with the international regulations now observed by all other civilized nations, there is constant danger of the occurrence of collisions involving serious loss of life and property, owing to the fact that American ships are required by our statutes to conform to rules in conflict with those observed by the ships of all other maritime powers.

As it is understood that the international regulations in question are entirely acceptable to American ship-owners, it is highly important that Congress should with as little delay as possible bring the provisions of our statute into conformity with the international regulations for preventing collisions at sea.

A copy of the note from the British minister is annexed.

Mr. SEWELL. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that that does not apply in any way to the torchlight signal.

Mr. VEST. No, it does not; it is not intended to apply to it.

Mr. SEWELL. I have some knowledge of the torchlight signal, having spent several years at sea, and I know what it is.

Mr. VEST. The very object is that the vessels of the United States shall not have signal-lights different from those of other nations. I do not pretend to have any maritime knowledge such as the Senator from New Jersey has, but suppose that an American vessel has its torchlight, and a Norwegian or a French ship is approaching, they will not know the meaning of the torchlight.

Mr. SEWELL. They will know that a torchlight is there, and that it indicates that there is something on the ocean.

Mr. VEST. They will know by the international signal code which we are attempting to adopt in this country. Here we are running under signals peculiar to ourselves. The very object which the State Department has in view is to have a system of signals known to the whole maritime world. Now the Senator from New Jersey wants to put in a provision for a torchlight which is found in a section of the Revised Statutes and is found nowhere else. The result would be that an American ship would have a torchlight; a foreign pilot does not know what that means; he does not know any such signal.

Mr. SEWELL. The torchlight certainly does not indicate anything except that there is an obstruction on the water; that there is a vessel approaching. It does not indicate what the other regulations are provided for. There can be no objection to the amendment. It will not hurt the bill.

Mr. VEST. We can not pass the bill into a law if it is amended here now.

Mr. SEWELL. There is no reason why the Senator from Missouri could not ask for a committee of conference with the other House.

Mr. VEST. That would be equivalent to the loss of the bill. I shall abandon it if it is amended. The provisions of the bill specify the lights which are to be carried both by steamships and by sailing-vessels. This article covers any case:

ART. 6. A sailing ship under way or being towed shall carry the same lights as are provided by article 3 for a steamship under way, with the exception of the white light, which she shall never carry.

These lights are known to the whole maritime world. The bill is recommended by the State Department after conference with the British minister and the authorities of other maritime nations. The only question presented to Congress is whether we shall have a system of signals peculiar to ourselves, or whether we shall have the signal-lights which are known to all other nations, the meaning of which is evident to them. If the bill is amended now, that is the end of the bill; it can not become a law at this Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House 8279, making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, and 6, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the said amendment insert the following: "And for the necessary and proper expenses of the said board and for the compensation of two civilians at $10 per day while so employed in the discharge of said duties the sum of $40,000, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated; and the report of said board shall be transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of War;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "For the construction of testing experimental wagon-carriages, for the purchase or manufacture of a multicharge gun and testing the same for;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The report was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to move, or I shall ask unanimous consent, if there is a pending order, to take up a bill. I shall not be able to be here after 9 o'clock, and my chances are getting very bad. I have been waiting for a long time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the condition of business is somewhat complicated. The river and harbor bill having been laid aside, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MITCHELL] moved to proceed to the consideration of a pension bill. That was laid aside informally, at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], to take up the bill which has just been passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I now stand where the Senator from Missouri stood.
Mr. MITCHELL. I should be very glad to yield to the Senator from Connecticut, but I fear if that is done other Senators will desire to have the floor and there was a sort of understanding that we should go on with pension bills, get through with them, and then be liberal to each other. So far as I am concerned, I should be glad, after the pension business is disposed of, that the names of Senators should be called in alphabetical order, and that each Senator should have the right to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, and in that way we can clear the Calendar very rapidly of those measures which ought to pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This debate can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pension bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not necessary. The Senator has already moved to proceed to the consideration of the first pension bill on the Calendar. Does the Senator desire an agreement to take up all the pension bills?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; I ask that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of all House pension bills favorably reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of pension bills from the House favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL. Laying aside the pending measure informally.

Mr. MAXEY. Am I in order in saying a word on that request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. MAXEY. I only wish to say that I belong to two committees which have very important bills pending. I am very willing that the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania shall be carried into effect if it is understood then that other Senators will have more of a fair show than we have had on account of pension bills during the present session. All I want is to secure the consideration of other House bills which are important and ought to be passed.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senate will indulge me for a single moment—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. I am quite satisfied that if we get the pension bills favorably reported out of the way we shall accomplish a good deal more than by scrambling along in an attempt to get other measures up while the pension bills have not been considered.

Mr. MAXEY. I agree with that, and I have so stated.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senate will proceed to the consideration of pension bills favorably reported.

Mr. MITCHELL. I trust so; I think we can get through with them in an hour.

Mr. HAMPTON. The Senator from Pennsylvania was kind enough to say that he would waive his request for a moment until I called up a bill, but I think the plan he suggests is so much the best that I shall not avail myself of his kindness, hoping that when we get through with the pension bills we may dispose of some of the other House bills which are on the Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am very much obliged to the Senator. I hope that we shall now proceed to the consideration of the first pension bill on the Calendar.

Mr. JACKSON. Has it been agreed that the pension cases shall be taken up?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that unanimous consent has been asked and given by the Senate that the House pension bills favorably reported and now upon the Calendar shall be considered.

Mr. CONGER. The river and harbor bill being informally laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding, that the river and harbor bill be informally laid aside.

MARY ALLEN.

Mr. JACKSON. I will ask then to take up House bill 2100.

Mr. HARRIS. Let them be taken up in their regular order.

Mr. JACKSON. But this is a bill which will be passed over under the order to consider bills favorably reported, and I wish to make an explanation in reference to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well. Let that bill be taken up first.

Mr. JACKSON. The bill stands upon the Calendar as adversely reported. Since the adverse report was made it has been called to my attention by one of the Senators from Kansas, and he has shown me evidence of the fact which removes the ground on which it was adversely reported. That ground was that the militia regiment of which the husband of the claimant was a member was not called out and in the service of the United States at the time the disability was contracted; but it is evident that that was a mistake; and instead of recommitting the bill I ask that it be taken up and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Chief Clerk will report the bill referred to.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (H. R. 2100) granting a pension to Mary Allen, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Allen, widow of John Allen, late a private in Company H, Seventy-second Regiment Missouri Enrolled Militia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Chair understand the Senator from Tennessee to say that the bill had passed and stood on a motion to reconsider?

Mr. JACKSON. No, sir; it stands on an adverse report; but facts which have since come to my knowledge show that the report ought not to have been adverse and that the bill should be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment; ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN SNYDER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pension bills on the Calendar favorably reported will now be considered in their order, under the unanimous agreement of the Senate.

The bill (H. R. 7718) restoring John Snyder to the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll the name of John Snyder, formerly of Company I, One hundred and twenty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARION D. EGBERT.

The bill (H. R. 2975) granting a pension to Marion D. Egbert was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Marion D. Egbert, late of Company K, Eighty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALVIN L. KNICK.

The bill (H. R. 1866) granting a pension to Calvin L. Knick was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Calvin L. Knick, late a private in Company E, One hundred and forty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHRISTIAN BAUMAN.

The bill (H. R. 6357) granting a pension to Christian Bauman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Christian Bauman, late a private in Company A, Fifty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. F. M. NORTON.

The bill (H. R. 8189) granting a pension to Mrs. F. M. Norton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. F. M. Norton, widow of James H. Norton, deceased, late a private in Company G, Eighty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES STOCKTON.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask consent to make a short statement, and then to ask action on a bill which is on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call the attention of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2377) granting a pension to James Stockton, which was some time ago reported adversely by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON] on the ground that Mr. Stockton was not acting under orders of United States officers. There is no question on earth about the disability and his being entitled to a pension. He was pursuing a bushwhacker when his horse was shot, and his arm which was hurt has since been amputated. There is no question about that. We have since discovered evidence showing that the force under which he was acting was acting under the authority of United States officers. I ask that the bill be taken up and passed.

Mr. JACKSON. That evidence has been shown since the adverse report was made, and it stands as does the Mary Allen case.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2377) granting a pension to James Stockton. It proposes to place the name of James Stockton, formerly of Company D, Thirty-first Regiment Missouri State Militia, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER WEIDE.

The bill (H. R. 7485) granting a pension to Alexander Weide was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Alexander Weide, late captain of Company C, Third West Virginia Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS JEFFRIES.

The bill (H. R. 200) granting a pension to Thomas Jeffries was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas Jeffries, late a private in Company C, of the One hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES MILK.

The bill (H. R. 5309) for the relief of Charles Milk was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles Milk, late a member of Company B, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment of Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LINA J. STEARNS.

The bill (H. R. 8082) granting a pension to Lina J. Stearns was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lina J. Stearns, widow of Oliver F. Stearns, late a private in Company F, Sixteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY MILKEY.

The bill (H. R. 5378) granting a pension to Henry Milkey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Henry Milkey, late a private in Company I, One hundred and eighty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FERDINAND HERCHER.

The bill (H. R. 8048) to increase the pension of Ferdinand Hercher was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Ferdinand Hercher, late a hospital steward in the United States Army, to $24 per month, in lieu of the pension now allowed him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OCTAVIA A. NEWHALL.

The bill (H. R. 5330) granting a pension to Octavia A. Newhall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Octavia A. Newhall, widow of Everett Newhall, late a private in the Fifth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers, Company F.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSANNA RILEY.

The bill (H. R. 7810) granting a pension to Rosanna Riley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Rosanna Riley on the pension-roll at $18 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET FLAHERTY.

The bill (H. R. 7853) granting a pension to Margaret Flaherty was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $8 per month, the name of Margaret Flaherty, dependent stepmother of Bartlett Flaherty, late a private in Company F, Third Maine Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. BEAN.

The bill (H. R. 1710) granting a pension to George W. Bean was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of George W. Bean, late a private in Capt. P. W. Cannon's company of Utah militia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM W. THOMAS.

Mr. HALE. I ask the indulgence of the Senate, as I can be absent only a few minutes from a conference committee, to take up two bills which I may not have any other opportunity to ask to have taken up. If they give rise to any debate I shall not press their consideration. The first is House bill 691, which has been reported favorably by the Finance Committee.

Mr. JACKSON. Is that a favorable report?

Mr. HALE. Yes; it is a unanimous report in favor of the passage of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 691) for the relief of William W. Thomas was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to William W. Thomas, of Portland, Me., $309, being the amount of coupons of United States bonds lost by him, and now unpaid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLERK OF COURT OF ALABAMA CLAIMS.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7034) to increase the salary of the clerk of the Court of Alabama Claims. I wish to say that while the bill appears to be adversely reported, it has been reconsidered, and it now stands on the Calendar as a favorable report, I understand.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that the salary of the clerk of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims shall hereafter be at the rate of $4,300 per annum.

Mr. JACKSON. I should like to inquire what salary the clerk is now receiving.

Mr. FRYE. Two thousand five hundred dollars; but the court is to last only about nine months more, and for four months it only had two judges, and there is an enormous amount of work to do. The claimants pay the salary themselves, and nine-tenths of them ask that the salary of the clerk shall be increased as proposed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. VINCENT PHELPS.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7805) granting a pension to Capt. Vincent Phelps.

Mr. MITCHELL. How many more members of the Committee on Appropriations will come in with special requests?

Mr. PLUMB. This is the pension bill about which I spoke to the Senator. He will not object.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it not one of those to be reached?

Mr. PLUMB. No; it will not be reached under the order in which the Senate is proceeding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable except by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name Vincent Phelps, late a captain and assistant quartermaster in the United States Army.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state that, while the bill appears on the Calendar as having been reported adversely, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] who reported it assures me that since it was reported testimony has been laid before him which removes the objection there was to it, and that if that testimony had been before the committee at the time the report was made the bill would have been reported favorably.

Mr. WILSON. The statement of the Senator from Kansas is correct. If the testimony which has come to my notice since the report was prepared and presented to the Senate had been before us at that time I should have reported the bill favorably.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF A. J. GUTHRIE.

Mr. BECK. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of two little bills which have been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims. There is less than $500 in each of them, and I am afraid I shall not have much chance to be in the Senate again before final adjournment. The first is the bill (H. R. 2154) for the benefit of the legal representatives of A. J. Guthrie, deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MITCHELL. We have proceeded now only ten minutes under the order of the Senate, and I do not think we can get through with the pension bills if we go on in this way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not disposed to object to the application of the Senator, because he is on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. It will not take five minutes, and I am obliged to be out on the business of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of A. J. Guthrie, deceased, of Louisville, Ky., $302.20, for services rendered and money advanced in taking care of property of the United States.

COL. HENRY J. HUNT.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 78) to provide for the retirement of Col. Henry J. Hunt.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint and place Col. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Henry J. Hunt on the retired-list as a major-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a major-general of the United States Army on the retired-list, to date from September 14, 1883.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not care about the preamble except that a change would send the bill back to the House. The preamble is true, though verbose.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 8236, Order of Business 1435, which was under debate last evening, may be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate consent to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8236) relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been read, and the question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia. Several amendments proposed in the Senate, the Chair understands, have been agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I move in accordance with a suggestion made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] who objected last night, to strike out in line 5, before the word "levied," the words "or assessments;" so as to read:

That hereafter sales of real estate, after advertisement as required by law, by the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia, for taxes levied by the commissioners of said District, or by other lawful authority, shall entitle the purchaser.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Is there any other place where the words "or assessments" occur?

Mr. INGALLS. No, there is no other place.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the presiding officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HARRIS, Mr. ALDRICH, and Mr. INGALLS were appointed.

APPEALS IN HABEAS CORPUS CASES.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 5691) amending section 754 of the Revised Statutes. The bill allows an appeal in habeas corpus cases to the Supreme Court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say that I see almost every Senator here—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan may proceed by unanimous consent, there being no objection.

Mr. CONGER. If the bill is taken up I suppose I may proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question of taking up the bill by unanimous consent is not debatable, but the Chair will hear the Senator from Michigan if there be no objection.

Mr. CONGER. I see Senators all around the floor with their hands full of bills and with more vigor and energy than I have ever seen heretofore in the Chamber, in the four years I have been a member of the Senate, in getting bills through. I stand here as the representative of the Committee on Commerce with a bill which should be disposed of one way or the other, and I am not responsible for the manner. I wish to make a proposition, and if the Senate will accede to it, very well. If it can be agreed that at a quarter past 3 the consideration of the river and harbor bill shall be resumed without further interruption until the Senate disposes of it in some way, I shall yield to any Senators who want to pass their little bills, subject to conference reports; and I will agree also that the time occupied by conference reports may be taken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. I will say half past 3.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the Senator from Michigan makes the request a little more sweeping than he intends. He does not mean to propose that the river and harbor bill shall remain before the Senate and displace all other business, appropriation bills and reports of committees of conference and things of that kind, but he simply desires that the consideration of the bill shall be resumed or continued at that time, subject to the necessary interruptions.

Mr. CONGER. I do not claim that the Senate shall make any particular disposition of the bill, but that it shall be resumed and not be displaced again by these appeals for unanimous consent, subject to reports of conference committees always.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there unanimous consent to the request of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMILLAN] to take up the bill named by him?

Mr. CONGER. Is the understanding which I proposed one which the Senate adopts?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I do not see how the Senate can make any agreement of that kind. The Senator from Michigan can call up his bill at any time he sees fit. All the business being done is being done by unanimous consent. The Senator can call up his bill at any time he sees fit. Why not wait until he decides to call it up?

Mr. CONGER. We may as well have an understanding now, and then I should feel better satisfied.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Some measure we desire to pass may be pending at that time. There is no object in giving unanimous consent now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask unanimous consent for the request of the Senator from Minnesota to take up the bill named by him, after which the Chair will recognize the Senator from Michigan.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5691) amending section 764 of the Revised Statutes. It proposes to amend section 764 of the Revised Statutes so as to read:

From the final decision of such circuit court an appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court in the cases described in the preceding section.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. McMILLAN. The other bill to which I referred was House bill 6760, in which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is interested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair promised to recognize the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. CONGER. I will yield on the supposition that the Senate will accede to my request.

Mr. McMILLAN. This House bill will take but a short time.

Mr. CONGER. I yield once more to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object to this manner of farming out the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There has been no farming out of the floor. The Chair recognized the Senator from Michigan, who was in charge of the matter which was before the Senate and which has been laid aside by these formal applications.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Senator from New York has had several opportunities—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1329, being the bill (H. R. 6760) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Rock Island, Ill., and Davenport, Iowa, and to establish it as a post-route.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment proposed by the Committee on Commerce inserting an additional section.

Mr. McMILLAN. I shall ask the Senate to non-concur in that, as the provisions contained in the proposed section I find are embraced in section 8 of the last river and harbor act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the reading of the amendment will be dispensed with. The committee withdraw the amendment, the Chair understands.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask the Senator from Minnesota whether that is a bill for a bridge across a Government reservation?

Mr. McMILLAN. No, sir; it is across the Mississippi River at Rock Island—a railroad bridge.

Mr. CULLOM. It is entirely separate from the Government reservation.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATE NATIONAL BANK OF BOSTON.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask the Senate to take up House bill 2263, Order of Business 1068.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2263) for the relief of the State National Bank of Boston, Mass. It refers to the Court of Claims the claim of the State National Bank of Boston for the sum of $100,000, in gold, deposited by the bank in the subtreasury of the United States at Boston, February 28, 1867.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DR. THOMAS J. JONES.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 6533, order of Business 1425, unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs without amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6533) for the relief of Dr. Thomas J. Jones. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Dr. Thomas J. Jones, of Warren County, Kentucky, $300, for medical services rendered the Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers during the months of October, November, and December, 1861.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DR. JOHN B. READ.

Mr. PUGH. I ask the Senate to take up House joint resolution 170, Order of Business 542.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent to call up a joint resolution the title of which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A joint resolution (H. Res. 170) in relation to the claim made by Dr. John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department, and for which no compensation has been made."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Let the joint resolution be read for information.

Mr. PUGH. The facts are stated in the report. The joint resolution commits the Government to nothing. It was unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to organize a board of officers, of not less than three in number, selecting the same from the ordnance and artillery arms of the United States service, who shall examine all the facts relative to the said claim of Dr. J. B. Read, and ascertain whether the United States have made any use of any invention of the said Read in projectiles; whether the same, if so used, were used under any contract, express or implied; whether he consented to the use of said projectiles by the confederate government against the United States, and whether his invention was used by the United States; to what extent, if any, his invention was so used, and whether such use was valuable to the United States, and if so, what sum, if any, under the circumstances of the use, the United States ought in justice to pay for the same; and that such board do make their report thereon with all convenient speed to the Secretary of War, to be by him transmitted to Congress, for its action in the premises; and that such report be accompanied by a statement of all the proofs submitted to and considered by them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I have objected on two or three occasions against the consideration of this measure. Since that time I have examined the papers in regard to it, and as I find it is proposed to refer the claim to a board for examination and for report to Congress, I have no further objection to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. There is an amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs, I think.

Mr. PUGH. There is no amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Is this a House resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a House resolution.

Mr. HAMPTON. The amendment referred to is embodied in the text of the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. I move then to amend after the words "United States"—I have not the House resolution before me—

Mr. HAMPTON. At line 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the amendment which was proposed to the Senate print of the resolution is incorporated in the House resolution now before the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. So I understand, but I desire to move an amendment. Not having the Senate print of the resolution before me I am not able to indicate the place except by reading the clause. I see here the words:

Whether he consented to the use of said projectiles by the confederate government against the United States.

The Secretary will notice that clause. After the words "United States," I move to insert:

Or otherwise gave aid and comfort to the rebellion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves an amendment, which will be read:

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 12, after the word "States," it is proposed to insert:

Or otherwise gave aid and comfort to the rebellion.

So as to read:

Whether he consented to the use of said projectiles by the confederate government against the United States, or otherwise gave aid and comfort to the rebellion, &c.

Mr. HAMPTON. I was about to say to my friend from Indiana that if an amendment is put upon this resolution now it will insure its defeat. We, after full discussion in the Military Committee, and I think on the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], the chairman of the committee, put in these words:

Whether he consented to the use of said projectiles against the United States.

After this amendment in committee, and after this resolution has come to us having passed the other branch of Congress with this amendment, I submit to the Senator from Indiana that an amendment now will defeat the whole measure. I think that it is so guarded that when the report is made to Congress there is no possibility of the Government being implicated in any improper expense. I trust he will not press the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. PUGH. Dr. Read was over 60 years of age when the war commenced. During the war he was surgeon in the University of Alabama of the cadets. This claim of his had its origin in a patent that was granted by this Government in 1856, and it grows out of a contract with the Government of the United States by which he surrendered his patent for experiment by the Government of the United States until it became satisfied that it would be of value. It was left to an Army board which was created by the Secretary of War to ascertain whether the invention was a success and what its value would be to the Government. It is the first instance in history where an inventor has surrendered to the Government a patent to experiment with until it became satisfied of its use and the value of the use. This claim is founded on a contract with the Government where there has been no compensation. The Read shell was used by the confederate government during the war. He never has received one dollar's compensation from this Government or the confederate government. It is a great discovery, and all the projectiles now in use by the Government of the United States are founded upon the discovery of Dr. Read.

This resolution creates a board of Army officers in pursuance of the terms of the contract, and that is the reason this resolution authorizes the creation of the board. It is required by the contract he made with the Government, and the only power this board has is to ascertain the facts, report them to Congress, and let Congress act upon the facts. It commits the Government to nothing on earth. It is harmless at any rate. I know this old gentleman well. He is a man of high character, a man of science and education. He is now over 75 years of age, and if this resolution fails to pass now the feeling of disappointment will go with him to the grave.

Mr. HARRISON. It seems to me that as this was to be submitted to a board, and Congress was to act on the report of the board, the scope of the inquiry should be enlarged and that we should know not only whether this gentleman consented to the use of his projectile by the confederate government against the United States, but what his attitude was toward the Government of the United States during the war. As this question is yet to come before Congress, and as that point can be discussed at that time and investigated by the committee if necessary, I withdraw the amendment at the solicitation of the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. PUGH. There is a Senate resolution which has become the House resolution, and I simply ask for the indefinite postponement of the Senate resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The House resolution has not yet passed.

Mr. PUGH. It is Senate resolution No. 67.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PUGH. Now, I move that the joint resolution (S. R. 67) in relation to the claim made by Dr. John B. Read against the United States for the alleged use of projectiles claimed as the invention of said Read, and by him alleged to have been used pursuant to a contract or arrangement made between him and the War Department, and for which no compensation has been made, be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN P. PETERSON.

Mr. PIKE. I desire to call up and have disposed of House bill No. 6270, Order of Business 1290.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6270) for the relief of John P. Peterson.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to John P. Peterson, late a private of the Capitol police, of $237.60, being the 20 per cent. additional compensation allowed him under joint resolution giving additional compensation to certain employees in the civil service of the Government at Washington, approved February 28, 1867.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. DAVIS.

Mr. PIKE. I offer the following order:

Ordered, That the vote of the Senate of January 7, 1866, transmitting the claim of William H. Davis, together with all papers, vouchers, and proofs connected therewith, to the Court of Claims under the provision of article I, section 1059 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for consideration and final adjudication, be rescinded and annulled; and that the said court be requested to return to the files of the Senate all papers, vouchers, and proofs which have been transmitted to them under said vote.

The order was agreed to.

PAY OF PASSED ASSISTANT ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. MAHONEY. I ask that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of House bill No. 1401, Order of Business 766.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1401) to amend section 1556 of the Revised Statutes, giving longevity-pay to certain officers of the Navy. It provides that passed assistant engineers of the Navy shall receive during the third five years after the date from which they take rank as passed (first) assistants, when at sea, $2,450; on shore duty, $2,250; on leave or waiting orders, $1,900; during and after the fourth five years from such date, when at sea, $2,700; on shore duty, $2,350; on leave or waiting orders, $1,950.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CITIZENS OF MARION COUNTY, TENNESSEE.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed at this time to the consideration of House bill No. 4684, Calendar No. 1423.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4684) for the relief of certain citizens of Marion County, Tennessee. By its terms the claims of certain citizens of Marion County, Tennessee, for quartermaster's stores and commissary supplies alleged to have been taken from them by United States troops during the late war, and known as claims filed before the "Jasper board," so called, are referred to the Quartermaster-General of the Army, who is to have full jurisdiction to examine and consider the claims, and make report thereon to Congress as in cases provided for in the second and third sections of the act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, &c., approved July 4, 1864.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the Senate disagree to the amendment. It is not material.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be read.

Mr. HARRIS. It will be read, of course.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7, after the word "referred," it is proposed to insert "to;" so as to read:

And they are hereby referred to the Quartermaster-General, &c.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAWLEY. What committee is this from? I do not recall it.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not recall the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill make a statement in regard to it.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] reported the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs. If the Senator from Oregon will look to the bill he will see that it simply refers the claim to the Quartermaster-General, and he is only authorized to report to Congress whatever he may find to be the merit or want of merit in the claim.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not know what this is. We do not have these bills in hand when they are jumped upon us in this way before we know what the order of business is. We do not always hear it. I ask to have the bill read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to know who these "certain citizens" of Tennessee are and what the "Jasper board" is. Not having been on the committee or seen the report, I do not know anything about the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. The report of the committee is No. 1519. I have it in my hand. The "Jasper board" is evidently a military board organized by the general commanding for the purpose of investigating these claims, which did investigate them and report upon them. The only effect of this bill is to remove the statute of limitations and allow the Quartermaster-General to investigate them, and when he has investigated them to report to Congress the result of the investigation.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to have the report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. HAMPTON February 27, 1885:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4684) "for the relief of certain citizens of Marion County, Tennessee," have considered the same, and beg leave to report the bill back to the Senate, recommending its passage.

In the seventh line of the printed bill the word "to" has been accidentally omitted, and the proper correction is made by the committee.

Accompanying the bill is the report from the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, which is made a part of this report, as explanatory of this case.

[House Report No. 230, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1492) for the payment of certain awards in favor of parties therein named, submit the following report:

It appears from the records and evidence in reference to the subject-matter of this bill, obtained from the War Department and filed in this case, that Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas, commanding the Department of the Cumberland, on the 8th day of February, 1864, issued the following order, viz:

[Special Field Orders No. 329.—Extract.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE CUMBERLAND,
Chattanooga, December 8, 1863.

A board of commissioners, consisting of the following-named officers and citizens, is hereby appointed for the purpose of adjusting the claims of the citizens of Marion County, Tennessee, against the United States Government for damages done their property in the occupation of said county by the United States troops.

Details for the board.—Brig. Gen. James B. Steedman, U.S.V.; Colonel Post, Fifty-ninth Illinois Volunteers; Lieut. Col. I. P. Kerr, Seventh Illinois Volunteers; William Pryor, esq.; A. Kelly, esq.

The assistant adjutant-general of Brigadier-General Steedman will act as recorder.

The board will commence at Jasper, Tenn., December 10, at 9 a. m., or as soon thereafter as practicable.

By command of Major-General Thomas.

WM. M. MICHAEL, A. A. G.

This order was issued in pursuance of the policy of the Government recognizing individuals who were public enemies by laws of war by reason of their residence as friendly to the Government, for the purpose of encouraging a sentiment of loyalty to the Federal Government within the insurrectionary territory.

Before any proceedings were had under the order, except the receipt of claims for adjudication, a supplementary order was issued, as follows:

[Special Field Orders No. 81.—Extract.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE CUMBERLAND,
Chattanooga, March 21, 1864.

XI. The following-named officers and citizens are relieved from further duty as members of the board of claims instituted by Par. XVI, S. F. O. No. 39 (C. S.), from these headquarters: Capt. J. W. Moore, Twenty-third Missouri Infantry; Lieut. H. A. Ford, Nineteenth Michigan Infantry; Mr. J. P. Thompson.

XII. The following-named officers and citizens are detailed as members of the board of claims instituted by Par. XVI, S. F. O. No. 39 (C. S.), from these headquarters: Maj. E. A. Griffin, Nineteenth Michigan Infantry; Lieut. Leroy Cahill, Nineteenth Michigan Infantry; Dr. John B. Armstrong.

By command of Major-General Thomas.

W. D. WHIPPLE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

The docket of cases heard by and before this board, and the awards made therein, now on file in the War Department, shows that there was filed with me for hearing four hundred and seventy-three claims.

The hearing before the board commenced March 23, 1864, and seems to have been concluded April 18, 1864; and there was awarded for quartermaster's stores and commissary supplies to the several persons who could prove their loyalty and the taking and use of the stores.

The committee do not regard the payment of these awards as a question submitted to their decision upon the original facts on which the awards are based. They have been determined and allowed by a military board, called under the apparent sanction of the Government, and whose action seems to have been approved not only by the major-general commanding, but by the War Department, and they have not all been paid. The committee use the term "seems to have been approved," because the papers and record remaining in that Department show no disapproval, which may be said to be a negative pregnant, almost as strong as affirmative proof.

This board was composed of officers in actual service. It held its sessions in the vicinity of the claimants, and its facilities for proof were better than any civil tribunal that has been constituted to hear such claims; and your committee think its findings are entitled to credit.

It may be said, in addition, the Government afterward furnished tribunals to hear this class of claims. These claimants, presumably relying on the awards made by this board, have not prosecuted their claims elsewhere, and statutes of limitations have run against them. But the committee prefer to stand upon the awards made, as an adjudication of a court created by authority of the Government to hear and adjudicate claims of individuals against it, and to hold such adjudications not formally disapproved by the authority convening the court as final.

A small number of these claimants have been paid by special acts of Congress, the exact number the committee are unable to say. The proceedings of the "Jasper board" are now in the hands of the Quartermaster-General, and it seems to your committee that an investigation by the Quartermaster-General is a matter of necessity before intelligent action can be had upon these claims. The committee therefore report a substitute for the bill, conferring authority upon the Quartermaster-General to investigate these claims and to report the result, with his recommendation thereon, to Congress for its action in the premises.

We annex hereto a letter from General W. S. ROSECRANS, addressed to the committee, in reference to these claims.

APRIL 7, 1882.

Respectfully referred to the Committee on War Claims.

When the campaign of Chattanooga was planned the vital question of subsisting the army until the Tennessee River and the railroad could be opened was fully considered, and it was deemed necessary to look to Sequatchie Valley for such supplies as it could furnish—beef in small quantities and corn and grain were expected, to furnish the trains hauling supplies of provisions.

In fact, the movement of these trains was a supreme exigency, and added that Wheeler's and Forrest's raid across the country to Shelbyville to destroy our railway communication in October, made it necessary to send our cavalry up the Sequatchie Valley to follow the enemy across to McMinnville. They, of course, subsisted on the country, and had no time to make accounts of much that they took.

The commission ordered by General Thomas to make account and report on claims for supplies so taken is what I should have ordered had I remained in command. I should have made it as soon as the railway and river were opened. My reasons for it would have been those above mentioned, and the fact that the Marion County people were by me considered as Unionists in sentiment.

W. S. ROSECRANS.

The bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not like to vote for a bill of this magnitude, containing so many claims and involving so large an amount, at so late a day in the session, without an opportunity to examine it as it ought to be examined, and without discussion. I fear we are opening a door that will prove troublesome hereafter, making a precedent that we shall not want to abide by.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to say to the Senator from Oregon that he need have no apprehension of a precedent like this, for I repeat and I undertake to say that no Senator on this floor can read this bill and doubt the fact that all that it does is to authorize the Quartermaster-General to investigate and report to Congress, and when his report comes the Senator from Oregon and every other Senator can determine for himself whether there be merit or want of merit in the facts so reported.

Mr. DOLPH. That may be, but that is all we did under the act of July 4, 1864, and if this is a class of claims excluded by that act we ought not now at this late day to enlarge the scope of it to let in four hundred claims from the State of Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Oregon relies on the statute of limitations alone. I am willing to abide the vote of the Senate.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill 7522. It is a bill that passed both Houses of Congress at the last session, but was not signed by the President simply through mistake. It has passed the House unanimously at this session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 7522) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for the issue to Joseph F. Wilson, of Peoria, Ill., or his legal representatives or assigns, of a number of warrants equal to eighty acres, in tracts not less than the subdivisions provided for in the United States land laws, to be located by Wilson, or his legal representatives or assigns, on any of the unoccupied and unappropriated public lands of the United States subject to preemption or homestead settlement, in lieu of the west half of the northeast quarter of section 19, in township 35 north, of range 5 west, situate in Porter County, Indiana, which tract was entered by and patented to Josiah Smith, of Macon County, Missouri, under and by virtue of the provisions of the acts of Congress approved June 8, 1872, and March 3, 1873, relating to additional homesteads, and by Josiah Smith, after his entry, sold and conveyed to Wilson, and of the title to and possession of which Wilson was divested and dispossessed by the judgment and decree of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana, at the November term, 1880, by reason of a prior disposal of or a prior equitable title in and to the tract, as the court held and decided, to or in persons other than Josiah Smith.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SILVER COINAGE NEGOTIATIONS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator to take up the joint resolution (S. R. 135) requesting the President to enter into negotiations with foreign powers to secure an agreement for the free coinage of silver.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Senator tell us what the object is?

Mr. ALDRICH. The resolution itself states better than I can. It is very short.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be again read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc. That the President of the United States is hereby requested to enter into negotiations with the states of the Latin Union, and such other foreign powers as he shall deem advisable, with the purpose of securing such treaties with them as shall bind the nations agreeing thereto to open their respective mints to the free coinage of silver with full legal-tender power, at such uniform ratio to gold as shall be agreed upon.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 122) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan twelve hospital tents and outfits to the American Society of the Red Cross for use in New Orleans.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 342) to authorize the printing of 310,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1885;

Joint resolution (S. R. 100) authorizing the printing of certain naval and military reports; and Joint resolution (S. R. 114) to provide for printing the annual reports of the Smithsonian Institution.

JOSEPH W. PARISH.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave to call up Order of Business 1275, being the bill (S. 2366) for the relief of Joseph W. Parish.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides for the payment to Joseph W. Parish, late of Peoria, Ill., of $58,341.85, being the balance of money laid out and expended by him in the purchase of 17,232 tons of ice for the use and at the request of the Government of the United States, which were not afterward called for or taken by the Government, but were wholly lost to Parish.

Mr. HARRISON. From what committee does that bill come?

Mr. CULLOM. From the Committee on Claims, reported by the honorable Senator now in the chair [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. PLATT. Is there a report?

Mr. CULLOM. There is a written report.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator offered to yield to me. I should like to pass a resolution for printing—a matter of current business.

Mr. CULLOM. This bill will be disposed of in a moment. I will state to the Senator from Connecticut that the Senator from Massachusetts, who is a member of the Committee on Claims, made a written report, which is on file.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it a House bill?

Mr. CULLOM. No.

Mr. HARRISON. What then is the object of passing it here now?

Mr. PLATT. I understood that the order was to take up House bills.

Mr. HOAR. I think this is a House bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope there will be no objection to this bill. This man has been absolutely on the point of starvation trying to get the little sum that is due him.

Mr. HARRISON. Is this a Senate bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I think it is.

Mr. HARRISON. Then if it is, I object, because certainly there is no use at 3 o'clock in the morning of taking up a Senate bill here.

Mr. CONGER. I must insist on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HOAR. I am quite confident this is a House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill at the desk and on the files is a Senate bill, and the report shows it to be a Senate bill.

Mr. CULLOM. That was my understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I have charge of the bill. I hope the Senator from Illinois will withdraw it.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator who reported the bill asks me to withdraw it, I shall do so.

Mr. HOAR. It is a very plain case, and two minutes' statement would satisfy the Senate, but I do not see why we should take two minutes for a Senate bill now.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know nearly as much about the case as the Senator from Massachusetts does, but I have been informed by the chairman of the Committee on Claims of the House that if we would take it up and pass it here, he thought he could get it through the House, and I feel that it is my duty to do everything I can to secure that end, because of my actual knowledge of the condition of the man and his family who is trying to get this little money. I hope the bill will be passed now.

Mr. HARRISON. If it is subject to objection I enter an objection, because it certainly is past belief that this bill can be got through the House in the condition of business there.

Mr. CONGER. Now I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not persist in urging this bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw it with the understanding that if a corresponding bill should come over from the House I may be allowed to call it up for action.

Mr. HARRISON and others. Of course there will be no objection to that.

Mr. CULLOM. Now will the Senator from Michigan allow me to introduce a resolution?

Mr. CONGER. I do feel that I have yielded fifteen minutes more than was asked of me, and I must insist on the consideration of the river and harbor bill. I had agreed to yield to the Senator from Connecticut about a matter of printing which ought to be passed.

Mr. CULLOM. But I wish to offer a resolution.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I ask to take up Order of Business No. 1337, being the bill (H. R. 4679) for the relief of Sarah E. Webster, administratrix.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one bill now before the Senate.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I understood that was withdrawn.

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw the Parish bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the bill has been taken up and is before the Senate. The Senator can move to lay it on the table or to postpone it until to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the bill be laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be restored to the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. That will do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be restored to the Calendar.

ISAAC A. VERPLANK, DECEASED.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President—

Mr. CONGER. The bill of which I have charge was informally laid aside for the passage of pension bills only. All these other bills have come in by a kind of understanding that at half past 3 we should resume the consideration of the river and harbor bill. If there is any faith in agreements, I want to go on with that bill now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to call for the regular order.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to appeal to the Senator from Michigan in regard to one matter of justice. The Senator from New York I think rose about the first, when I was in the chair, of the gentlemen who were recognized, but other gentlemen applied one after the other. I hope the Senator will allow him to make his motion. If he does, I shall feel relieved. It will not take two minutes, I understand, to dispose of his bill.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I want House bill 4679 acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4679) for the relief of Sarah E. Webster, administratrix. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4679) for the relief of Sarah E. Webster, administratrix, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Sarah E. Webster, of Buffalo, N. Y., administratrix of Isaac A. Verplank, deceased, late a judge of the superior court of Buffalo, of the sum of money which was assessed as the income tax and was collected from and paid by Isaac A. Verplank to the Government of the United States, upon his salary as a judge of the superior court of Buffalo, N. Y., such tax having been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

C. A. CILLEY.

Mr. VANCE. I ask the consent of the Senate to call up—

Mr. CONGER. Now I claim the right to go on with the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has the floor to state his proposition.

Mr. VANCE. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill No. 4856, Order of Business 1084.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that Order of Business 1084, being the bill (H. R. 4856) granting a pension to Bvt. Col. C. A. Cilley, of North Carolina, be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. Is it an adverse report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An adverse report.

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir; there is an adverse report.

Mr. CONGER. Then I object to taking up the bill.

Mr. FRYE. It was an adverse report, because in the opinion of the committee the Commissioner of Pensions could grant the pension, but afterward on going down to see whether that could be done he persisted in refusing to grant it. There is no sort of question about the propriety of the pension.

Mr. VANCE. The committee expressly say that they report adversely without prejudice to the bill, because they think relief ought to be granted at the Department.

Mr. FRYE. The committee thought he ought to have arrears. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place the name of C. A. Cilley, of North Carolina, late a major and assistant adjutant-general of United States volunteers and brevet colonel of United States volunteers, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Printing—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Michigan wishes to call for the regular order, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. CONGER. I promised to let the Senator from Connecticut make his report, and then I shall call for the regular order.

Mr. HOAR. Let us have until 4 o'clock for general business.

Mr. CONGER. Oh, no; I can not.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Printing instruct me to recommend concurrence with the House in the passage of House joint resolution No. 367.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. Res. 367) providing for the printing of additional copies of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs on the investigation of the National Home for Disabled Soldiers.

Mr. HAWLEY. The allotment of copies is quite disproportionate, but it is hardly worth while to send the resolution back with an amendment now.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. B. CORNELL AND OTHERS.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1172) for the relief of J. B. Cornell and others, have instructed me to report, in accordance with the resolution of the Senate of February 7, 1884, that they have referred this bill to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883.

The report was ordered to be filed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. CONGER. Now, I call for the consideration of the bill which was laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan calls for the consideration of the regular order, the title of which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 8280) making appropriations for the preservation and continuation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes."

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce, in section 1, line 13, before the word "million," to strike out "five" and insert "ten," increasing the total appropriation from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000. The Chair understands that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has moved to lay the amendment on the table. The question is on the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. CONGER. I thought there was a motion to lay the bill on the table, which motion was lost.

Mr. FRYE. I moved to lay the amendment on the table. A vote was taken and I did not question the vote. I made the motion for the purpose of stopping further discussion at that time. The question is now on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question, then, after the explanation, is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce to strike out "five" and insert "ten," so as to read "$10,000,000."

A division was called for.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PENDLETON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES]; otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). On this amendment and on this bill I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 27, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Beck,	Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,
Blair,	Gibson,	Kenna,	Sabin,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to insert as section 2:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby directed, at his discretion, to cause examinations or surveys, or both, and estimates of cost of improvements proper to be made at the following points, namely:

Harbor at Portland, Me.: To ascertain and report what further work, if any, is necessary at that locality.

Harbor at Camden, Me.

Big Rapids of Saint John's River, Maine.

Harbor at Wellfleet, Mass.

Taunton River, Massachusetts.

Vineyard Haven, Mass.

North River, in Salem, between Essex and North Bridges, Mass.

Duck Island Harbor, with a view to a harbor of refuge, Connecticut.

Susquehanna River between Owego and Binghamton, N. Y.

Channel between Jamaica Bay and Rockaway Inlet, Queens County, New York.

Harbor at Waddington, N. Y.

Mouth of the Patchogue River, New York.

Pond River, Kentucky.

The Secretary of War is directed to report to the next Congress whether or not the Government dry-dock at the Louisville and Portland Canal, Kentucky, is adequate for the purposes of commerce, and what alterations, if any, are necessary, and the cost of making the same.

Farm Creek, Illinois, with a view to changing its course.

The west channel of the Saginaw River opposite West Bay City, Mich., from the point where it intersects with the channel of said river heretofore excavated by the Government, and extending southerly on the west side of the middle ground.

Islas Creek, California, off San Francisco Bay. A survey is directed to be made regardless of the fact of existing obstruction by the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the channel of said creek by the Protrero and Bay View Railroad Company.

Harbor of San Luis Obispo, Cal.

During the reading of the amendment,

Mr. VAN WYCK. Where is the item about Binghamton, N. Y.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 16.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I see.

Susquehanna River between Owego and Binghamton, N. Y.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the amendment is not yet completed. After it is read debate will be in order.

The reading of the amendment was concluded.

Mr. CONGER. In line 39 the word "Rasa" should be "Rassoe;" so as to read:

Punta Rassoe Harbor, Florida.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the amendment by inserting between the eighth and ninth lines the words:

Harbor at Duxbury, Mass.

Mr. FRYE. I understood the Senator in charge of the bill to ask that the committee amendments should first be acted on.

Mr. HOAR. This is an amendment to a committee amendment.

Mr. FRYE. So it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR. This is assented to by the chairman of the committee, who was going to move it himself.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to offer an amendment in line 7 of this section, after the word "Maine," to insert:

Harbor at Bath, Me.

Mr. CONGER. There is no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to offer an amendment also. After line 51 of the proposed section 2, I move to insert:

Vancouver Harbor, Washington Territory.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER. I offer an amendment to add at the end of the proposed section 2:

Chippewa Harbor, in the State of Wisconsin, at and below Eau Claire, with a view of ascertaining if the channel is changing, or the banks giving way to the injury of navigation, and, if so, what is necessary to remedy the same.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin what he proposes to accomplish by this plan of a survey?

Mr. SAWYER. It is reported that the channel is changing there to the great injury of navigation. We want to ascertain that. That is all.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the engineer in that district could ascertain that very easily, without making special provision here.

Mr. SAWYER. They say they want a permission of law in order to do that.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I do not object to it. The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "Maine," at the end of line 8 of the proposed section 2:

Harbor at Portsmouth, N. H., from the sea to the wharves. Little Harbor at Portsmouth, N. H., with a view to its improvement as a harbor of refuge.

Winnepiscogee Lake at the point called The Wiers, N. H. The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I move, as an amendment to the proposed section 2, for surveys, to add after line 51:

For survey to determine cost of connecting Barnegat and Tuckerton Bays, New Jersey, by a channel six feet in depth.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. Mr. MAHONEY. After line 22 I move to insert:

Nansemond River, Virginia.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am directed by the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries to propose a few amendments to this bill, but I presume it is only section 2 which we are now considering. One is—

Mr. CONGER. Does it relate to a survey?

Mr. VAN WYCK. No; to actual business.

Mr. CONGER. That would come under section 3.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is no survey; it has been established a long while.

Mr. CONGER. If it is not for a survey it ought not to be in this section.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It has got beyond that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert:

That the sum of $50,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement of the Mississippi River at or near Eastport, opposite Nebraska City, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CONGER. That is not proper in this section.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Is not this section 2?

Mr. CONGER. This section is for surveys entirely.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I beg pardon. I will present it wherever the Senator suggests. It comes from the Committee on the Mississippi River Improvement, and is therefore not subject to any point of order.

Mr. CONGER. It ought not to come in this section.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I withdraw it for the present.

Mr. CONGER. This section is only directing the Secretary of War to cause examinations and surveys to be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska withdraw his amendment?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I withdraw it.

Mr. CONGER. I offer an amendment to come in between lines 43 and 44 of section 2:

For a channel connecting Traverse Bay and Torch Lake, near Eastport, Mich.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for a vote now on the section as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce as amended.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the state of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and section 2 is under consideration.

Mr. CULLOM. Has the reading of the bill been completed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not yet.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not like to call for a separate vote on all these propositions, but the Chief Clerk read one of the amendments of the committee about the Susquehanna River, I think, somewhere near the neighborhood of Binghamton, N. Y., and I felt curious to know what the point was for a survey of the Susquehanna River between Owego and Binghamton. It would seem to be idle. In high water you might raft logs up there. I hardly know what the object is.

Mr. CONGER. Section 2 and section 3 are amendments taken from the House river and harbor bill which was laid aside, but which the House had agreed upon for surveys and examination.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then this committee know nothing about it except what the other committee told them?

Mr. CONGER. I do not know the object of making such an inquiry as that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was seeking to find out what the committee did know. I trust now the Senator will consent that that item be stricken out.

Mr. CONGER. I have no interest in it in the world. The New York members wish it in.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suggest—the Senator may not know it—that the New York members must have intended that as a dry joke. [Laughter.] No, I do not want to press for a separate vote on a little matter of that kind.

Mr. CONGER. If the Senator moves to strike out that item I shall make no objection.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move to strike it out. There is no reason for it, as the Senator when he comes to examine the matter will certainly see.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves to amend the amendment by striking out in lines 16 and 17 of section 2 the words:

Susquehanna River between Owego and Binghamton, N. Y.

A division was called for on the amendment, and the ayes were 2.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw the call for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Senator from Michigan demand the division?

Mr. CONGER. I simply wish no further count.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Senator from Michigan demand the division?

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Michigan did not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Chair can not allow the Senator from Michigan to withdraw the call.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose it was a little irregular, but I expressed my own opinion that there was no necessity for a further count.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the call for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Senator from Massachusetts call for the division?

Mr. HOAR. He did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call is withdrawn. The "noes" have it, and the amendment to the amendment is disagreed to. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce as amended, being section 2.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to insert as section 3 the following:

SEC. 3. That for examinations, surveys, and contingencies, and for incidental repairs, for which there is no special appropriation, for rivers and harbors, $100,000: Provided, That no survey shall be made of any harbors or rivers until the Chief of Engineers shall have directed a preliminary examination of the same by the local engineer in charge of the district, or an engineer detailed for the purpose; and such local or detailed engineer shall report to said Chief of Engineers whether, in his opinion, said harbor or river is worthy of improvement, and shall state in such report fully and particularly the facts and reasons on which he bases such opinion, including the present and prospective demands of commerce; and it shall be the duty of the Chief of Engineers to direct the making of such survey if, in his opinion, the harbor or river proposed to be surveyed be worthy of improvement by the General Government; and he shall report to the Secretary of War the facts, and what public necessity or convenience may be subserved thereby, together with the full reports of the local engineer. Said reports of preliminary examinations and surveys shall be made to the House of Representatives, and are hereby ordered to be printed when so made.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If it be in order now I would move my amendment.

Mr. FRYE. No; your amendment ought to go on the first section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment to the amendment is to insert:

That the sum of $50,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement of the Missouri River at or near Eastport, opposite Nebraska City, which said sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CONGER. There is an appropriation in this bill and there was a large appropriation in the last bill for the different points on the Missouri River where the river commission desired that improvements should be made. They have the full power, as the Senator will see by looking at the river and harbor bill of last year, to direct at what points the improvements shall be made, and if I remember aright Eastport is one of the places in the last bill; and therefore as the appropriation in this bill is $10,000,000, to be apportioned to the same places as were named in last year's bill, I think he will find that the provision in the last law covers the case. If that is so, there is no necessity for the amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think the Senate will understand one thing right there in connection with that. It will illustrate a point which was made some time ago in the discussion of this matter, that there is a great deal of ingenuity about this bill. It is true, as the Senator says, that the last river and harbor bill appropriated $800,000 to be expended on the Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City, a distance of a little over eight hundred miles. That bill provided for the creation of a river commission for the Missouri River, and under the authority of the law the commission have met, and they have determined how this money shall be expended, and the commission, I will say to the Senator from Michigan, have provided that all moneys subject to their control and disposition shall be expended commencing at Kansas City and going toward the mouth of the river. Kansas City is about three hundred and eighty miles from the mouth of the river, while from the mouth of the river to Sioux City is a distance of eight hundred miles. So the river commission have resolved that whatever money they have to expend shall be expended commencing three hundred and eighty miles from the mouth and proceeding toward the mouth, leaving over four hundred miles, a wide river, a dangerous river, that has always required attention from the Government, with no sort of care and protection on the part of the Government.

This bill provides a pro rata amount of last year's appropriation, it is true, but suppose this bill gives $700,000 for the Missouri River, which would be the pro rata, it goes into the hands of the river commission, and they spend this money from Kansas City toward the mouth of the river; and I ask my friend if there will be a dollar for four hundred miles of the river between Sioux City and Kansas City. This illustrates the argument made a little while ago that there are places absolutely neglected by this bill and forty-three places provided for that do not need any further protection. There may be other places that ought to be brought forward in this connection, but my attention is called to this because I am interested in it.

Mr. CONGER. I think I am not mistaken. In the last river and harbor bill is this provision:

Improving Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City, Iowa, including such harbors on said river as in the judgment of the board of engineers herein created will benefit commerce and navigation, $500,000.

Then it provides for the commission, a board of engineers to be created to consist of five members, three to be appointed from the Corps of Engineers of the Army and two from civil life; and it then continues:

That the said commission shall, under the direction and with the approval of the Secretary of War, superintend, control, and expend for the purposes of this act all appropriations or unexpended balances heretofore made for the improvement of said river, and which may hereafter be made for said river, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and shall prepare and submit, through the Chief of the Engineer Corps to the Secretary of War, to be by him transmitted to Congress at the beginning of the regular session in December of each year, a full and detailed report of all their proceedings and actions, and of all such plans and systems of work as may now be devised and in progress and carried out by them, and of all such additional plans and systems of works as may be devised and matured by them, with full and detailed estimates of the cost thereof, and statements of all expenditures made by them.

The commission have charge of the river far above Eastport, and the commission have full power to expend the money on harbors or for improvements of the river at any point they deem necessary. I should dislike very much to take away a part of the power of the commission. It will have about $900,000 for that river if the bill passes as proposed. The bill under which the commission were created provides that they shall expend the money not only for the improvement of the river but for such harbors upon it as require improvement. I think it is very full upon that point. I hope the Senator will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator will see how full it is when I read to him what the commission created by the act has done. It has the whole power of expending money on the river and saying how the work shall be done. The Senator will see my point if he will give me his attention for a moment. I read from the report of the Missouri River Commission under date of December 9, 1884. After explaining how this money is to be expended and how the work shall be done, the commission say:

Holding these views, the commission have determined to concentrate their means and to apply them where there is the best promise of obtaining substantial benefits to the general commerce of the United States, at the earliest practicable date, and before the entire completion of the improvement. Evidently useful results can be most quickly obtained by improving the lower end of the river, providing an outlet to the Mississippi. Engineering necessities require that the work should progress down stream. The initial point must, therefore, be at some distance above the mouth. The commission have selected Kansas City, three hundred and eighty-six miles above the mouth, because it is the first important commercial center to be met with in proceeding upstream. They would have preferred an initial point at a less distance from the mouth than three hundred and eighty-six miles, but believing that no very great benefit would be conferred upon the commerce of the United States before the improvement shall extend from the mouth to Kansas City, they have allowed the following considerations to control, namely, that it was desirable to begin the work near a good base of supplies, and that some detached work had already been done here under previous appropriations which could be utilized as part of a general scheme of improvement.

My friend will see that while they have control of this river and the control of the money, they have actually resolved to commence work upon the river at a point three hundred and eighty-six miles from its mouth and then work toward its mouth.

Mr. CONGER. The bill allows them outside of the work generally on the river to improve particular harbors like this at Eastport.

Mr. VAN WYCK. They have this money for improving the river between the mouth and Sioux City; that is the appropriation, and they have a right to use that appropriation for improving the river and the harbors upon it. There is another appropriation for the rocks at Sioux City. Between Kansas City and Sioux City, four hundred miles, there is no provision available.

Mr. CONGER. The law gives them $500,000 to expend on the river and improving such harbors as require improvement on the whole length of the river.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely; but they say that their purpose is, and they have so resolved, that they will expend that money by commencing three hundred and eighty-six miles from the mouth of the Missouri. That is the difficulty about the matter; and here we are to-day. These harbors may be washed away and commerce ruined. We use the term "commerce" in a Pickwickian sense principally in connection with this bill. It is not like the Susquehanna, that the Senator insisted upon. It is the other extreme. The Susquehanna is too dry and the Missouri is too wet; that is the trouble; and yet they must all be provided for in the same way. It seems the Missouri is a wet stream. That is the trouble. There is too much water there. We do not complain much of that about Washington, it is true, but on the Missouri they do complain of too much water.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me?

Mr. CONGER. I object to anybody being allowed to come in and interfere with this bill at present. I am tired of watching.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to show further from this report that what I say is correct.

Mr. CONGER. I will admit it all; I will admit everything you say.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Well, then, I will explain. They propose to expend the whole sum appropriated between Kansas City and the mouth of the river. It is true, as the Senator says, that the act of last year provided for improving Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City, Iowa, including such harbors on said river as in the judgment of the board of engineers herein created will benefit commerce and navigation, $500,000.

I read the argument of the commission and their action in establishing the commencement of the work at Kansas City. They say:

The larger portion of the appropriation for the portion of the river below Sioux City has been allotted to the works to be executed at and below Kansas City. The programme which the commission have adopted is to make the improvement continuous, working downstream from Kansas City to the mouth of the river, applying all the means placed at their disposal, as far as possible, to this purpose, protecting land and building up new banks as this becomes necessary for the preservation of the channel.

Now I want to call the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the fact that there is only one exception between Kansas City and Sioux City. They intend to spend money on the portion from Kansas City to Sioux City, and they make only one exception.

The report continues:

It was found, however, that at Saint Joseph, Mo., a cut-off was threatened, which, if made, would have a far-reaching and injurious effect upon the stream, and that moreover there was a considerable amount of work there in place, executed under former appropriations, which, if left to itself, would be lost. These two circumstances combined seemed to justify making an exception in this case.

Now mark, they have examined the whole river, and they conclude to spend the money from Kansas City to the mouth of the river, and then they make an exception at Saint Jo.

These two circumstances combined seemed to justify making an exception in this case to the general rules established, and it was accordingly determined to complete the revetment of the banks in this vicinity. One or the other circumstance alone occurs elsewhere, but does not, in the judgment of the commission, justify a departure from the systematic plan proposed.

There is the plan. They have charge undoubtedly of this river, as the House and the Senate have so said, but they have in advance proclaimed how they will expend the money, and there is no provision anywhere for improving this river at Eastport where the Government has been protecting the harbor for years; there is no provision for protecting the river at Omaha where the Government has been protecting it for years; and instead of using the money appropriated for the eight hundred miles of river, this entire amount is to be used at the point I have designated.

What more need be said? If I have satisfied the brethren and they see the importance of this amendment, I am satisfied. Now I will say to my friend that the commerce of some of the rivers named in these bills is a myth. There are logs that float down the Susquehanna in high water. We have logs that float down the Missouri in high water, and we float other things besides logs; but I would say to my friends from the Susquehanna region that this matter of commerce on the rivers named in these bills is a myth.

I say to the Senator from Michigan that I think not a single steamboat has dared invade the waters of the Missouri during the last year. Look! a river like that, a little larger than the Mississippi, and yet its commerce is so shamefully neglected that not a single steamer paddles its way up and down that stream in a year! Look at the position we are left in. Beyond the Missouri River this Committee on Commerce can give no heed. The river needs aid; but it will not receive it at the hands of this commission, and the effect, I say to the Senator, will be the same upon the Mississippi River. After the Mississippi River Commission spend a few million dollars more, you will hear nothing of a steamboat coming up the Mississippi River; they will manage to impede the commerce.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me a moment?

Mr. VAN WYCK. For a moment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would not in the slightest degree depreciate the value of his speech, but I beg leave to suggest that this Hall is to be put thoroughly in order, swept, many chairs brought in, the gallery swept, and various arrangements that I need not discuss made, before 9 o'clock. The attendants tell me they will need two hours or two hours and a half to put the place in order for a becoming appearance.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not propose to interfere with them.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not suppose the Senator from Nebraska intends to speak until 7 o'clock.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know what the arrangements might be about his speech. It is merely my duty as a member of the committee on arrangements for the inauguration ceremonies to make the suggestion. That is all.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the sixteenth amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 17, 18, 19, and 20, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. R. W. TOWNSEND of Illinois, Mr. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN of Indiana, and Mr. R. G. HERR of Michigan managers at the further conference on its part.

Mr. VAN WYCK rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire to proceed?

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator from Michigan can suggest to me a way in which we can get some relief on the Upper Missouri beyond the point fixed by the river commission, I shall be content, but I have reports here from the engineers of the Army—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Nebraska will suspend for a moment the Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the sixteenth amendment of the Senate, and disagreeing to the amendments numbered 17, 18, 19, and 20, to the Post-Office appropriation bill, and asking for a further conference.

Mr. PLUMB. The only remaining ground of disagreement between the two Houses on the Post-Office appropriation bill is upon the provision inserted by the House in the bill providing for a special stamp for the immediate delivery of letters in cities of a certain size. This was rejected by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, in the first instance, on account of its being legislation, and also on account of some doubt as to the propriety of it as an original proposition.

The House has insisted on it somewhat strenuously, and by a vote just taken has still declined to agree to the Senate amendment striking it out. There is some necessity, I am told, for cleaning out this chamber before 7 o'clock, which will interrupt legislative proceedings somewhat, and after consultation with the conferees on this bill I feel constrained to make a motion that the Senate recede from its amendments striking out these provisions in the Post-Office Bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 17, 18, 19, and 20.

Mr. MORRILL. May I inquire of the Senator from Kansas whether the House has accepted what has been sometimes called the subsidy provision of the bill?

Mr. PLUMB. The House has accepted that amendment at last by a vote a few moments ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to recede from the amendments 17, 18, 19, and 20, disagreed to by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8280) making appropriations for the preservation and continuation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I have an amendment I desire to propose to this bill, and I will ask my friend from Nebraska to withdraw his amendment so as to enable me to propose my amendment in order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suppose my amendment is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska withdraw his amendment?

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir. I very much dislike that we should be left entirely to the mercy of the elements on the Missouri River when it is the duty of the Government to protect us there certainly as much as from Kansas City to the mouth of the river. What may be the result of the labor of this commission is extremely doubtful. It is becoming very doubtful as to any good results from the Mississippi River Commission except the expenditure of millions of dollars without very much to show for it.

I fear very much that while these Army engineers are experimenting with theories on a small reach of the river the rest of that river and the inhabitants along its banks and their property will be subject to devastation by its ravages. Commerce, as I say, is being injured by the fact that there is no protection to the river except at a certain locality, and these men are possessed of the idea that by artificial banks built upon the margin of these streams they will restrain them within certain limits. That is the theory these men have, and we are paying millions of dollars to experiment, and these gentlemen are expending the money within a small limit that they may test their theory. They even propose to-day to test the effect of their experiment after they have for years been spending millions of dollars, and now, forsooth, they desire to take every dollar of the appropriation and put it within a few miles on the river to test an experiment.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. It is very late at night, or rather early in the morning, and I can not speak in a very loud voice, but I will try to make the Senator from Nebraska and the Senate understand me. The statement I desire to make to the Senator from Nebraska is that I think he is mistaken in supposing that the Mississippi River Commission is building or has built any very considerable amount of levees on the Mississippi River of late years. The few levees that are there were built in the main by the people who live in the delta.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator tell us where they have been spending the large amount of money we have appropriated for the Mississippi River?

Mr. GEORGE. I believe if the Senator would see—and he has plenty of time now to do it—the reports of the Mississippi River Commission, he would find out all about that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the Senator if it is not the fact that the Mississippi River Commission are insisting upon spending the money within small spaces for the purpose of testing the effect of their experiment? Is that not the fact?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know about that. This bill requires them to spend all the money granted under it at two points, Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches. I do not know whether that is important or not.

Mr. VAN WYCK. They are asking now to test this experiment.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to get a resolution passed?

Mr. CONGER. I object to the introduction of a resolution?

Mr. DAWES. I am sure the Senator will not object to it after a statement.

Mr. CONGER. There will be time enough for that after we dispose of this bill. I presume after the Senator from Nebraska has done, the Senate will dispose of the bill by a vote one way or the other. I have yielded all night long, and now I throw the responsibility upon the Senate. I intend to perform my duty by insisting that no other business shall be done until the Senate by a vote throw overboard this bill or adopt it.

Mr. DAWES. I have been necessarily absent from the Senate all the evening.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator can wait a few minutes. I have waited seven hours continuously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The commission say in their report:

The duties prescribed to the commission by the same act were—To superintend and direct such improvement of said river, and to carry into execution such plans for the improvement of the navigation of said river from its mouth to its headwaters as may now be devised and in progress, and to continue and complete such surveys as may now be in progress, and to make such additional surveys, examinations, and investigations, topographical, hydrographical, and hydrometrical, and to consider, devise, and mature such additional plan or plans, and all such estimates as may be deemed necessary and best, to obtain and maintain a channel and depth of water in said river sufficient for the purposes of commerce and navigation [and], under the direction and with the approval of the Secretary of War, superintend, control, and expend for the purpose of this act all appropriations or unexpended balances heretofore made for the improvement of said river, and which may hereafter be made for said river, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

There is no question as to what these commissions are endeavoring to do upon the Missouri River and upon the Mississippi River. What I ask is that a great portion of the Missouri River shall not be left powerless. These men are claiming the right and are exercising it to spend this money for the purpose of testing an experiment. That experiment is by levees, by banks to hold the river in check, and that they have never been able to do.

Now I will ask the Senator from Mississippi a question. He says that many levees have not been built by the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. GEORGE. I said recently.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was speaking about what the Mississippi River Commission had done. I did not say "recently."

Mr. GEORGE. I did.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The gentleman is very careful to speak that word in a whisper. It was not understood. If they have not done it, it is because their money gave out; it was only then that the word "recently" applies. When they had the money to spend they spent it in the way I have stated.

Mr. GEORGE. There was very little money granted to the Mississippi River last year, only about $1,300,000.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly not; we were reforming last year. Last year was the year of reform. Before that they had abundance.

Mr. GEORGE. I have never seen the abundance.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My friend evidently knows what the Mississippi River Commission have spent. He knows that for many years the people in that section have spent money in building levees, their own people, the communities have spent it. I will ask the Senator roughly how much has probably been expended for the purpose of building levees on the Mississippi River?

Mr. GEORGE. By whom?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Everybody outside of the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Millions?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; several.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The people have spent several millions and the Government has spent several millions. Do the levees protect that country or the river?

Mr. GEORGE. But sometimes they break.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely; they break. That is the point. Now I ask my friend how often do they break?

Mr. GEORGE. They break whenever the water gets strong enough.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Just as I say, the trouble with the Western rivers is that they have too much water, and when the water comes it gets over that country and floods the Mississippi, and from the earliest days you have been trying to dam it out.

Mr. GEORGE. Is there much damming done down that way?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think likely. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] was engaged in the lumber business. He knows. I will accept his amendment which he makes to me sotto voce. He says we have been trying to dam it in for years.

Mr. GEORGE. At this hour I do not regard it as exactly fair for the Senator from Nebraska to attack the levee system of the Mississippi River.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I only attack the levee system because I am speaking of the system of this commission. That is their system, the levee system. I ask my friend if that is not what they are proposing to do to-day, to apply the levee system? Is not that the proposition of this Mississippi River Commission?

Mr. GEORGE. The bill, as I understand it, proposes to take the work on the Mississippi River out of the hands of the commission and give it to the Secretary of War. That is the way I look at this bill. The commission are to have no duties, as I understand, after this bill is passed, except to draw their salaries. That is the plain meaning of this bill as I understand it. I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the reading of the bill on that subject.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have not time to read the bill just now. I will accept the gentleman's statement, if he says it is true.

Mr. GEORGE. I say it is true.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not so understand it. The commissions are continued in full force, both the Missouri River and the Mississippi River Commissions. We have been getting on the Missouri what they have been enjoying on the Mississippi for some years—spending money and doing no good.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator let me read him part of this bill, so as to inform him on that very point?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. On page 2 of the bill I call the Senator's attention to the second provision, which reads:

And provided further, That any money which shall be allotted under this act for the improvement of the Mississippi River below Cairo, except so much thereof as it shall be necessary to expend in preventing the works in progress on other portions of the river from waste and injury, shall be expended in the continuation and completion of the works on the Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches of the river now in progress of improvement, as established by the commission—

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely; "as established by the commission."

Mr. GEORGE. Let me read further. It continues:

To the end that the proposed improvement of said two reaches of the river on which works are in progress shall be completed at an early day, and the plan of said commission for the improvement of the navigation of the river fully tested; and the money thus allotted by this act for the improvement of the Mississippi River shall be expended by the Secretary of War and in accordance with plans approved by him.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly. That does not establish what my friend says.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to know what the Mississippi River Commission is to do in reference to spending the money granted by this bill?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It leaves the commission in full blast.

Mr. GEORGE. To draw their salaries?

Mr. VAN WYCK. No; the Secretary of War has what he always had, control over them. He has had control of them always. Their plans have been subject to his approval always.

Mr. GEORGE. I want to ask the Senator one question. What is left for the commission to do when the work has to be done under the direction of the Secretary of War and according to plans formed by him?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Under plans "approved" by him. My friend certainly understands the use of the language which is set forth so plainly. This Mississippi River Commission has always been subject to the control of the Secretary of War, as the Missouri River Commission has.

Mr. VEST. We have had that same provision in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes; and yet my friend from Mississippi says the Mississippi River Commission is substantially abolished.

Mr. BUTLER. Except to draw their salaries.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Except to draw their salaries. I am surprised that the Senator, with his usual sagacity and acumen, should have made the mistake to suppose that the improvement of the river was to be taken from this commission when it is placed there more firmly than before. There is where I find the word "tested."

Mr. GEORGE. One of the remarkable virtues and beauties of this bill is that it undertakes to test the plans of the Mississippi River Commission by having the work done not by them, but by the Secretary of War, and not according to their plans, but according to the plans of the Secretary of War.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The gentleman will see, if he will examine, that this bill is drawn precisely as all other river and harbor bills. They are all under the control of the Secretary of War, to be expended by him, the money to be drawn through him and the plans to be approved by him.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, let us see about that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. This bill shows clearly; it provides as my friend read:

And provided further, That any money which shall be allotted under this act for the improvement of the Mississippi River below Cairo, except so much thereof as it shall be necessary to expend in preventing the works in progress on other portions of the river from waste and injury, shall be expended in the continuation and completion of the works on the Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches of the river—

Confining the expenditure of money to these points—

now in progress of improvement, as established by the commission, to the end that the proposed improvement of said two reaches of the river on which works are in progress shall be completed at an early day, and the plan of said commission for the improvement of the navigation of the river fully tested.

That is all. That is where I started some time ago, and I would have been further on it if the gentleman had not interrupted me by endeavoring to show that the commission were substantially wiped out, when they are in greater force and power. All this money is to be expended at those two points in order to test the correctness of the plan of improvement of the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to correct an error into which he fell in supposing this bill is a copy of previous bills on that subject?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It may not be a copy, but it is in the same spirit.

Mr. GEORGE. I call the Senator's attention to the paragraph on page 146, section 1, chapter 229 of the acts of the last session of Congress, in which he will find these words:

Improving Mississippi River from the head of the passes to Cairo, including the improvement and preservation of the harbors of New Orleans, Natchez, Vicksburg, Greenville, Memphis, Hickman, and Columbus, the deflection of the waters of Red River from the Atchafalaya, and keeping open a navigable channel through the mouth of the Red River into the Mississippi River: Continuing improvement, $1,350,000; which sum, together with the sums herein appropriated for the Mississippi River from the Des Moines Rapids to the mouth of the Ohio, shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission.

That is the way the last bill read. This bill provides that this expenditure shall be made according to the plans of the Secretary of War. By the last bill it was obligatory that the work should be done "in accordance with the plans, specifications, and estimates of the Mississippi River Commission." By the present bill the work is to be done according to plans approved by the Secretary of War. He is not obliged to follow the plans of the Mississippi River Commission. He may adopt the plans of any other person, provided only he approves them. The Mississippi River Commission having no power to do the work, and their plans not being obligatory on the Secretary of War, there is nothing left for them to do under this bill but to draw their salaries.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Not the plans of the Secretary of War, but it expressly provides that it shall be according to the plans of the commission. That is the point I was making, that the Mississippi River Commission have been expending money and producing practically no results.

Mr. CONGER. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he is willing to have a vote on the amendment and let the bill either be passed or rejected?

Mr. VAN WYCK. In a few moments.

Mr. CONGER. Will he not now? He has spoken an hour. I wish the country to know that every Senator here desires to vote, and the Senator from Nebraska, without talking to his amendment at all, occupies the time until it is too late to pass the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Oh, no.

Mr. CONGER. I am ready to move to lay the bill on the table or to do anything to stop the waste of time which might be occupied with some useful legislation. The whole Senate is anxious for a vote, and the Senator from Nebraska comes in here just at the last end and by talking—without talking even to his own amendment, talking against time, which he has a right to do to defeat this bill—consumes time. All I desire is that the Senate and the country, from the remarks I make, shall see why I have not been able to press this bill to a vote.

Mr. VAN WYCK. What shall I do now? I should like the people to know also that there are four hundred miles of the Missouri River left out in the cold, and, at certain seasons of the year, out in the wet; four hundred miles that do not receive the fatherly care of this Government or of this Committee on Commerce; and I have a right to show that. This Government has neglected the river bank at Eastport until farms have been carried into the river—that is of no moment, I suppose—until hundreds of people like my friends in Mississippi have been driven from their homes; all they had on earth has been swept away by the ravages of that stream, and by the aid of their neighbors and friends they have received support, although they were not looked after so carefully as they would if an application had been made to the Government of the United States to furnish them with rations. That has never been done, although they suffered to an alarming extent, and that river has been left until its channel is ruined, and at this time, by reason of its having been left so, its course has changed and it has shot across a point of the country in a bend so that it devastates that country.

I do not put my amendment on the ground of the necessity of the people on the banks of the river, though I might properly do so. Evidently the channel of that portion of the river is to be ruined, and here are reports after reports establishing that fact. Year after year from 1877 to 1884 the Government has been making these improvements by appropriations meager it is true, but they have helped protect the channel of the river and keep it there, and protect the people living along its banks. I desire that the country should know that here money is to be expended in great sums, and when it is expended it goes to forty-three points where it is not called for, and many other points are left without receiving a dollar.

I only speak of what the Mississippi River Commission has been doing incidentally. I wanted to tell the Senate and the country that on the Missouri we desire not to be left to the tender mercies of a commission that wants to spend a million of dollars to test experiments and find out the correctness of theories, for that is all that has been done. My friend from Michigan will never live long enough, his children never will be old enough to see the Mississippi River protected in its channels by the scheme and project of the Mississippi River Commission. You will spend millions of dollars unless they are checked, enough to build a railroad on either bank of the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers from Sioux City to New Orleans, and you will have nothing then except the levees erected on the banks. You can build from Sioux City to New Orleans a railroad, you can build from Sioux City to the Atlantic a railroad, and you will then not have spent as much as the Mississippi River Commission will spend if they are allowed to go on testing their experiments and drawing million upon million from the Treasury of the United States.

I want the country to understand that men are not to be put down in this way by mere matter of trifling. Give, the House says, $5,000,000 in a gross sum without any regard to where it shall go, make surveys on the Susquehanna River between Owego and Binghamton, and then without any particular explanation as to where the money is to go, or what the necessity, $5,000,000 more is added by the Senate. We are asked to appropriate $10,000,000 without knowing where it is to go, to put it into the hands of men to experiment and carry out their theories when nine-tenths of the people living in the Mississippi Valley know that the commerce of that river and its waters never can be held within bounds.

My friend from Michigan will see the significance of these last remarks. I think I have established the facts sufficiently, and I am willing to take a vote on the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Before the Senator takes his seat I should like to make a correction of an error into which the Senator has fallen.

It is very well understood down there by all persons who study and give thought to this question that the levee system can be made very perfect and protect the country.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Why have you not done it in the last fifty years?

Mr. GEORGE. We have not had the money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Chair must remind Senators that they should address the Chair and not each other.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the reason we have not done it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Have not had the money! I think I have heard the gentleman and others from those States stand up in the Senate and say that those people in their municipalities, in their counties, and in their States had extraordinary advantages in raising money to build levees on the banks of the Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. I never heard that statement made.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir; that statement has been made in this Chamber, that they had done all they could and more than they should have done; and that now the only thing left was after they had exhausted their resources and built levees that did not stand till the next spring tide came, to make another levy on the great Treasury of the United States. That is the kind of levy designed. I say to my friend that I want the people of this country to understand that is the kind of levies that are sought upon the Treasury. Five million in gross, says the House, and the Senate adds five million more—a small matter; and yet you can not hear about paying an honest claim of $100 to some poor fellow.

If you proposed to make reservoirs at the head of the Missouri River and the Mississippi, I could understand it; I think there would be something practical in that case. The trouble now is from too much water, and the reservoirs are to hold it, and damming it there would be a good deal better than damming it in the channel when you really have no channel. There will be a deeper damnation if this committee goes on expending $10,000,000, not seeming to know, and apparently not caring, where it is to be expended; and I say to my friend he will not live long enough, nor I, to see the result, but you let us proceed in the same course which has been going on since the creation of the Mississippi River Commission, and generations to come after us will rise up and not call us blessed.

No, sir; I prefer, as far as I may be able, to remove just a little of these curses in advance, and I desire the people to know just what is being done with these eight millions of dollars. You want certainly to keep open the water ways. We are in favor of that; we desire to do that, and that is the only possible excuse for the expenditure of this large amount of money, that it keeps open the water ways, and they are there as a standing menace to the aggressions, to the greed, to the extortion of railway corporations. If those waters are open it is a warning to the corporations that are sapping what little of the substance and prosperity of the people is left after the ravages of the rivers have overcome them. But if we only had nerve and courage we could get rid of this extortion a good deal easier than by spending these millions of dollars. We could build a railroad from Sioux City to New Orleans, as I have said, or could build a railroad from Sioux City to the Atlantic and have something to show for the money. You have not for what you bury in the Mississippi River; you have not to-day except as you protected the poor dwellers along the banks down there, and that you do not propose to do any more. That is the principal benefit that has been done.

Now, Mr. President, I think I have said enough even to satisfy the Senator from Michigan, and I should like to have a vote on my amendment. It is important. I do not want the gentleman to say that there is no report from the Engineer Department. Here it is:

Mr. CONGER. Read it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am afraid I shall not have time to read it all on this amendment, but I have another amendment. I have satisfied the Senator that this measure has been recommended from 1877 to 1884, recommended by every engineer-officer who has been there spending money. I have the maps here. The Senate may be willing to see the maps. The maps show the course of this river and the necessity of this expenditure. Here they are, and if this does not satisfy the Senate then I may be under the necessity of reading these reports on another amendment, but I trust not.

I now ask for a vote on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

Mr. GEORGE. Of course at this hour, now about 5 o'clock in the morning, and after the Senate has been in session about ten hours, I can not go into a defense of the levee system which has been so vigorously attacked by the Senator from Nebraska. Besides, it would be wholly unnecessary to do so.

I merely rose for the purpose of saying that according to my reading of the history of the Mississippi River it has been demonstrated to the reasonable satisfaction of every man who has given the subject attention that the levee system has proved a success, and that the water of that river can be easily kept within its banks if they are properly leveed.

In addition to that, the history of the river has shown that where the levees are on both sides the effect has been universally to deepen the channel of the river and to lower the flood-line, thereby improving greatly the navigation of the river and giving security from overflow to the adjacent country. That is all I will say now.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. It seems to me apparent that any further discussion of this bill would be a mere waste of time, and I move to lay the bill on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. CONGER. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were here, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WALKER. My colleague [Mr. GARLAND], I understand, is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS (after having voted in the affirmative). The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. WALKER] has reminded me of a pair with his colleague [Mr. GARLAND] which I had forgotten. Our pair allows me to vote if it is necessary to make a quorum, but for the present I withdraw my vote, as I understand the Senator's colleague would vote differently from what I would vote. I beg to withdraw my vote.

Mr. KENNA. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I believe the Senator from Ohio would vote "yea." I ask the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator from Missouri may be free to vote. The Senator from Ohio would vote against the bill, I think.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Ohio would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay" upon this question.

Mr. CALL. My colleague [Mr. JONES] is detained from the Senate by illness, but is paired. If he were here, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 31; as follows:

SIOUX INDIAN LANDS IN DAKOTA.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Michigan consents to the offering of a resolution, which I send to the desk.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object to the offering of a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that it may be acted upon at this time.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate what, if any, changes have been made in the boundary lines of the reservation heretofore occupied by the Sioux Indians at the Crow Creek agency in Dakota, and how much thereof, if any, has been opened for occupancy as public lands, how much remains in the occupation of said Indians, and the history of the title by which said reservation has been and still is occupied by Indians, and whether said Indians have been consulted in respect to, or have consented to, any change in such boundaries, together with copies of all orders and other papers in said Department concerning the same.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8280) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

Mr. VAN WYCK. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the amendment? Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 3 it is proposed to add:

That the sum of $50,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement of the Missouri River at or near Eastport, opposite Nebraska City, which said sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 8, nays 34; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORTATION ROUTES.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senator from Michigan to yield for the introduction of a resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read for information.

The resolution of Mr. CULLOM was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, by a subcommittee or otherwise, to employ a stenographer, and with the same authority given the committee under resolution of July 5, 1884.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know that I object, but I should like to have the Senator from Illinois state what the purpose of the expedition is.

Mr. CULLOM. I will state it. The Senator may remember that during the last session of Congress the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard was given liberty to sit during the vacation and to make investigation so as to bring the report known as the Windom report from 1873 down to the present time. As every Senator knows, last year, after Congress adjourned, was not a period in which men could do very much work outside of the campaign. Hence, there was not a very considerable time spent in making the investigation, although the chairman of the committee, the honorable Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], to-day made a considerable preliminary report, which, I think, when it is printed, will be found to contain a very great amount of useful information. There has been very little money indeed spent so far in making the investigation, and I hope there will not be very much spent, but still, for the purpose of completing the report, the committee ask that this liberty be given.

Mr. PLUMB. The Windom report was and is a very good document, but I had no idea it was a serial. I judge from the statement of the Senator from Illinois that it is to run in numbers through coming time. Of course, if it is to be continued for this year, next year we shall have another number added and so on.

I do not question that perhaps some investigation might properly be undertaken in regard to the very interesting subject which has been mentioned, but there is a confusion of jurisdiction, it seems to me. This whole subject was debated in the Senate somewhat exhaustively by the Senator from Illinois in a speech which he made on the interstate-commerce bill which bears his name, of which he need not be ashamed at all, and which passed the Senate. That bill came from the Committee on Railroads. If the Committee on Railroads had sufficient jurisdiction of this subject to report the bill which after ample discussion passed the Senate, it seems to me that we do not want to get another committee into that pasture.

Mr. CULLOM. I think if the Senator should examine the bulk of information, testimony, and statistics we have already gathered, he would find that they are very valuable, and if we had had that during this session of Congress we should have been much more enlightened on the subject of interstate commerce or its regulation than we were. I do not apprehend that there will be any conflict of jurisdiction of committees or anything of that sort; but when completed this will be a work which every Senator and the people of this country will be very glad to receive, I think.

Mr. PLUMB. That still does not meet the objection I make, which is that this subject has been committed by the recent action of the Senate to another committee. I do not know what is going to become of the Committee on Railroads in this matter. Is that committee to be laid on the shelf, or are they to carry on a similar investigation in the same field, with the power to report, &c.? If I may be permitted to do so, I suggest that if the committee of which the Senator from Illinois is a member have this useful information they might endow the Committee on Railroads with it, and we might therefore get all this very important subject together under one head.

The interstate-commerce bill which we passed, or a similar one, undoubtedly will be before us at the next Congress. Apparently that bill can not now become a law. At once the question will arise in the Committee on Railroads, which has given this subject investigation and has made its report and submitted it on the floor of the Senate, shall that committee be ignored, and is the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard to take up that subject at the next session? It seems to me that this subject, as interesting as it is, as far-reaching as it is, and as proper for investigation as it is, ought to be committed to one committee, and that the committee once having had jurisdiction of it should retain it.

Mr. CULLOM. It has.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not see the force of having one committee to investigate the subject and another committee to consider and report a bill upon it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no doubt that the Senator from Kansas finds this a very interesting theme for discussion on the river and harbor bill, and I think his speech will apply about as well to the one as the other. The Windom report, to which he has alluded, contains certain very valuable statistics in regard to prices and rates of freight down to the year 1873. A great many things have happened since 1873, and in considering the question of interstate commerce it is very important, in my opinion, that all those statistics should be continued down to the present time. The space between 1873 and 1885 should be covered by the statistics in regard to the rates of freight and prices and receipts and shipments, so as to show the growth of the internal commerce of the country and to show the decrease or increase, whichever it may be, of the rates of freight from all the principal and from all the internal points.

The investigation so far continued has been entirely in regard to cereals, in which the State the Senator from Kansas represents has as large an interest as any State in the Union. If I had time to have the preliminary report read, which I presented to the Senate this morning, the Senator would find, I have no doubt, many very interesting facts in reference to the receipts and shipments of grain at various points in his own State, and the local and through rates of freight to other points contained in that report.

This matter has never been committed to the Committee on Railroads. It has never been under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Railroads. The investigation has been continued under the order of the Senate by the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard. It has never been in the charge or care of any other committee. There is no intention, I am sure the chairman of the Committee on Railroads knows, to trespass upon any of the rights or prerogatives of that committee.

It is a very interesting and important investigation, and if the Senate sees fit to put it in charge of the Committee on Railroads I am sure no member of the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard would find fault; but it is an investigation which should be continued and concluded by some one.

Mr. CULLOM. I have the honor of being a member of the Committee on Railroads, and I am sure that committee is not feeling at all jealous of the work of the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard. I hope the committee which now has charge of the subject will continue its investigation to the end.

Mr. PLUMB. Since I made the suggestion it has occurred to me that we might at least pacify the Committee on Railroads by giving them a similar junket.

Mr. CULLOM. They are not asking it.

Mr. PLUMB. A plaster of that kind goes a good ways. I presume some of the other committees, the Committee on Commerce, which deals with this question in part, as well as the Committee on Railroads and the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, could partake of the same medicine.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no junketing in it.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not mean that offensively; but it all amounts to a certain degree of traveling.

Mr. CULLOM. Possibly not.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether all the information he desires is not to be found in the census reports?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not by any means. If it were there it would not be asked to have the investigation ordered. I am very sorry to say that no part of it is in the census reports.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

The resolution was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I trust that the Senator having charge of the pending bill, having due regard to all the circumstances which are so evident, will permit me to bring forward a few remaining pension bills for action by the Senate at this time. I wish to say that about two-thirds of the contested cases of widows of officers of high rank which have been considered by the committee at this session have already been passed by the Senate, and that all which have been brought to the attention of the Senate have been passed. Those which remain being of the same character, it seems to me just that they should be disposed of by the Senate. Some of them have been pending for nearly two years. These ladies have of course felt a very great anxiety in regard to the fate of their bills, and since the others have passed into law by the action of the Senate, of course they must feel a sense of injustice unless their cases are disposed of in like manner.

Mr. CONGER. I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will not insist on the regular order, for it is very evident the time consumed will be wasted, and this is really a very important matter. I have taken pains to see those members of the committee who have opposed the passage of these bills, or at least some of them, and they say that they must take the action of the Senate as equivalent to an instruction to the committee, and there is no danger of any opposition in the way of discussion. Nothing is necessary to be done but to call up the bills and take the action of the Senate upon them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan insists on the regular order.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator from Michigan to give me ten minutes.

Mr. CONGER. I have yielded to the Senator all this night long.

Mr. BLAIR. I beg the Senator's pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan insists upon the regular order. Does the Senator from New Hampshire ask for unanimous consent?

Mr. BLAIR. I move to lay the pending bill with its amendments on the table.

Mr. CONGER. That was the last motion.

Mr. BLAIR. There has been action since then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A question has been taken since that motion was made on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska. The motion is in order. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand seconded?

Mr. BLAIR. It is not worth while, I suppose, to have a wrangle over the matter.

Mr. DOLPH. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn. The motion to lay the bill on the table is lost.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Michigan must know that time is going to waste, and that by objecting to my proposition to do a little act of justice, which would not take ten minutes, he does not hurry his bill any. I ask him once more to allow the pending order to be laid aside informally until these few pension matters can be acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. I can not yield to that. The Senate has refused time and again to lay the bill on the table. A majority of the Senate has shown a disposition to act upon the bill in some way or other, and I should be unfaithful to the trust which is committed to me if I allow the time to pass on so, in case I can prevent it. I can prevent these things, and I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator should be consistent then. He permitted a resolution to come in which occupied more time than it would have taken to pass the bills which I am pressing upon the attention of the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Illinois said the resolution he desired to offer would take but one moment and would pass without opposition.

Mr. BLAIR. Precisely; and I say these bills will pass without opposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan insists on the regular order.

Mr. BLAIR. I see that he does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I have an amendment to offer. In section 1, line 16, after the word "act," I move to insert the words "and subject to any conditions therein contained;" so as to read:

Shall be applied by the Secretary of War to each of said public works respectively, in proportion to the sums appropriated for such works in and by the said act, and subject to any conditions therein contained.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That appears to be an amendment to the text of the bill. The Senate has not yet acted upon the amendments offered by the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator in charge of the bill does not object to it. I think it is obviously needed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator in charge of the bill accepts the amendment. The question recurs on the adoption of the third section proposed as part of the amendments offered by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to ask a question for the convenience of the Senate, whether any reason exists why we should not now take a recess until 9 o'clock.

Mr. PLUMB. I think it will be safer to wait for a few moments until something is learned from the other House about the disposition of business there. That information has been sent for. It is manifest that a recess must be taken at some time before 12 o'clock, when the inauguration which is supposed to be impending is to occur, but the precise time is one of those things which ought to be pretty carefully considered.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the engrossing and enrolling clerks can understand what is going to happen as well as any one else.

Mr. PLUMB. That information has been sent for, and will be here in a few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will give the earliest possible information on that point. He has been conversed with several times. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce to insert section 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This concludes the amendments of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am instructed by the Committee on the Mississippi River Improvement to report another amendment to the bill providing for an appropriation of $50,000 at Omaha. Omaha is on the Missouri River, I will state for the benefit of Senators who do not seem to know very much about the geography of that part of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Nebraska put his amendment in form?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is in the same form precisely as my former amendment reported from the same committee, except that I insert Omaha. While the clerks are preparing the amendment I will say that I was just a little surprised at the vote of gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber. I remember a few years ago our friends had a great deal of horror of water in the Mississippi River.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments numbered 1 and 29 of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8179) "making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

W. B. ALLISON,

H. L. DAWES,

F. M. COCKRELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. S. HOLMAN,

J. G. CANNON,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference with the House.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator from Iowa please state what the difference is about?

Mr. ALLISON. There are two amendments, I will state to the Senate, one only being material, the other being a summing up of the total of several items of appropriations. The amendment relates to the compensation of the clerks of Senators.

Mr. HARRIS. All of the other amendments have been agreed to in the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Every other amendment has been agreed upon in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY). The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate further insist upon its amendments 1 and 29, and ask for a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the presiding officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

PROPOSED RECESS.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa what he thinks of the propriety of the Senate taking a recess, and if a recess, from when to when?

Mr. ALLISON. I will state that the legislative appropriation bill is of course undecided; the sundry civil bill is now pending in the House of Representatives and under consideration there with reference to the disagreeing votes between the two Houses. The naval appropriation bill is pending in the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. It will be absolutely necessary for the naval bill and the sundry civil bill to be put in conference again before a recess is possible, unless both bills are to fail.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8280) making appropriations for the preservation and continuation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 1:

That the sum of $50,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement of the Missouri River at or near Omaha, Nebr., which said sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not desire to repeat the argument I made a little while ago in regard to my former amendment, but Omaha is decidedly as important as the other point named. Omaha is on the Missouri River. It is one of the termini of the Union Pacific Railroad. Opposite to Omaha is Council Bluffs, and between is the Missouri River. The channel and the current of the river at that point have for years needed protection from the General Government. At no time has the Government in its beneficence and liberality given sufficient to accomplish what ought to be done at that point, and the citizens of Omaha, like the citizens of Mississippi, have been under the necessity of contributing out of their surplus large sums of money for the purpose of keeping the river in check and control.

It follows as a necessary consequence if the bill is passed in its present form that Omaha will receive neither care nor attention from the General Government. I do not believe that even in the haste of passing this bill Senators desire to leave a strip of country four hundred miles in length along the Missouri River without any sort of care or protection on the part of the General Government. It does not seem possible. If that is to be the result, then this bill is wrong, and every Senator ought to admit it to be wrong, to reach the points sought to be reached by the bill in this blind way, the money to be divided pro rata among points provided for heretofore, when some of the points provided for heretofore are necessarily cut off by the action of the Missouri River Commission, which controls this matter. It is an injustice to that part of the channel; and I trust that the Senator having charge of the bill will excuse me if I feel it my duty to resist the appropriation of $10,000,000 when I know that four hundred miles of this river which has heretofore been protected by the Government will be left without any sort of protection or expenditure of money.

Whatever may be the distribution under any river and harbor bill there ought at least to be protection given at the points which need protection. That should be done. There is enough money expended in places where there is no necessity for an expenditure, but where there is actual necessity, as there has been for years at both of these points, they should not be left unprotected under the operation of the bill and the action of the Missouri River Commission.

My friend will see the point as to why I should resist the measure as it stands. It affects the State of Iowa as much as it affects the State of Nebraska. The point at Eastport, where the ravages were made, was in the State of Iowa, I understand, and Omaha is the place now suggested as the point which needs protection, and which it will not get under the bill unless my amendment is adopted. With $10,000,000 appropriated under the bill the people living at those two points will have to protect themselves in order to preserve the channel of the river. I can not for a moment conceive why the Senator in charge of the bill should object to my proposition. If he will look at the reports on this matter he will see the necessity of the proposed expenditure, and he will see that it can not be reached except by the adoption of the amendment which I have proposed.

It certainly seems a little strange that our brethren living along the Mississippi River, who are always ready and willing and anxious and persistent to get appropriations for their river, should deny justice by their votes, or that they should deny this necessary aid to four hundred miles of river front running from Kansas City to Sioux City. That may be all right. It is according to the view generally taken of the appropriation of money by a river and harbor bill. Certain points are selected to be benefited. Had not the Government been carrying on this work for ten or a dozen years the question might be different; but it is no new matter.

I have made these suggestions to Senators because I supposed they did not exactly understand the locality there and the necessity of this work. That it is necessary can not be disputed by the Government itself, and when $10,000,000 is appropriated certainly a small sum should be distributed to points where there is an absolute necessity for the expenditure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions relating to this bill with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am authorized by my friend from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] to vote whenever it is necessary to make a quorum, and I feel that it is necessary now. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—10.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I suppose the Senator from Michigan who has the bill in charge has some very good reason for pressing it upon the Senate at this quite inconvenient hour, and that he must have undoubtedly the impression that it will become a law. While I should regard that as a calamity of no mean proportions, I have no purpose of detaining the Senate for any great length of time, and do not do so at all with any view of impeding the passage of the bill, because there is plenty of time yet I observe by the movement of the clock, and there is not much of anything to do in order to get through with the business in time to avoid an extra session.

But it is just possible that, in the effort to pass this bill, that which we are now seeking to avoid and for which we are subjecting ourselves to a great deal of discomfort may come about. A little discussion now will not I think contribute either to that event or in any manner to the defeat of the bill, because I think a majority of the Senate are determined upon its passage; but the proportions of the bill and its terms are of that striking character which I think ought to have some comment.

Ever since I have had any familiarity with the river and harbor bills which have annually passed Congress, with the knowledge I have had of the manner in which the money has been spent, or rather mispent, and of the very meager results which have been obtained from that expenditure, I have felt that if there were any portion of the public moneys that were any worse in their expenditure and in the results obtained than another, it was in this matter of moneys that we appropriate for the rivers and harbors of the country. This is because there are certainly some very vital errors in the entire system.

In the first place, the money is spent by persons who are not civil engineers. We educate at West Point military engineers, and when a young man has graduated from the academy, for all the purposes for which an engineer is required, for the expenditure of large sums of money annually appropriated, he is called an engineer ready-made, and is assigned to duty upon some work of improvement of rivers or harbors, or both. It must be apparent to even the casual observer that for all practical purposes a large number of the young men who graduate at West Point as engineers can not be so except in name. Hundreds and thousands of men graduate from the law schools of this country who are not lawyers and never become such; and a man would be a rather poor client who would select any one as an attorney for the simple reason that that person had been graduated from a law school. Yet the United States Government commits from day to day and from month to month and year to year, as it has done for many years past, the erection of the public improvements of the character which are provided for in the river and harbor bills, and the improvements of rivers and harbors, and the consequent expenditure of large sums of money, to these men upon the theory that they are not only engineers but civil engineers, when in the majority of cases they are neither for any practical purpose.

In addition to that they lack the incentive to effort which always more or less characterizes men upon whose effort must depend their livelihood, because these are men who have before them that statutory promotion which is independent of any merit on their part, and therefore that inducement which leads to great human effort, which is the foundation of genius as applied to all the affairs of life, is absolutely and unqualifiedly lacking. I am not denying that there are very many eminent men among these engineers, and that they are up to the ordinary average of men as to morals, as to character generally, and as to what may be ordinarily termed capacity; but I am speaking of them as a class, and of the fact that we commit to them as a class this great responsibility, practically without any kind of consideration as to their special qualification for the work which they are to do.

In the next place, the system of appropriation has always been vicious. Instead of appropriating for important works sufficient money to carry them on as fast as they can be economically constructed or the improvements made, a small sum of money is given. In fact, in the large majority of the cases in which appropriations are made the very meagerness of the appropriation constitutes the argument for making the appropriation, because when you come to consider a bill which appropriates from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000, any one proposing to take so small a sum, so few ounces of the loaf as $10,000 or even $20,000, is rarely refused. It is almost impossible to say "nay," while so much is going, to one who is willing to take so small a share and keep his peace.

The result is that these bills are what are termed log-rolling bills. Conscientiously or unconscientiously, they embrace among their supporters the men and only the men whose immediate section of the country receive some alleged or supposed benefit on account of the expenditure. Therefore the bill ceases to be a national bill or a national appropriation in any sense or to be viewed from a national standpoint, but is considered chiefly with reference to the local advantage to be derived from it.

I have in mind a harbor on Lake Erie which needs improvement, and which has needed improvement for the past twenty-five years. Some fifteen years ago an estimate was made by the engineer officer in charge that $100,000 would construct jetties or parallel walls, extending outward into the lake from the shore to an extent which would enable the small creek which comes down from the hills to plow out a channel and keep that channel open. Considerable commerce has grown up at that point. It is a meritorious place so far as the necessities of the situation are concerned and the business to be done there. For the last ten years or more an appropriation varying from $10,000 to $20,000 annually has been made and spent at that particular place, and still $100,000 is yet required in order to complete the original improvement.

Substantially nothing has resulted from all the expenditure of that money, and why? That harbor is on the south shore of Lake Erie. In the winter-time the storms from the north east into the mouth of the creek which forms the opening of the harbor sand and debris, generally filling it up in such a way as to make it almost if not quite impassable to the schooners which bring there during the summer iron ore from the Lake Superior country, and carry back the coal from Pennsylvania. So in the spring, when the weather will permit of the commencement of work, the first duty of the engineer is to dredge out the sand, gravel, mud, drift-wood, and so on, which has been cast into the harbor during the winter-time. That work takes up from one-third to one-half of the appropriation. It is a work which has to be done early in the season in comparatively inclement weather, because it must precede the doing of any business at that harbor.

In addition to that, as the walls have been advanced very slowly into the lake by reason of the insufficiency of the appropriations, they are left in a ragged and unprotected condition each fall. The storms which bring the debris into the harbor of which I have spoken also break down the walls and destroy a large portion of the work done the preceding year. So there must be undertaken a very considerable system of repair in order to put the whole even in the condition in which it was left the fall before, and by the time those two things have been done the major portion of the money has been expended, the season is gone, and the next year sees a repetition of the same thing, and the next year, and so on. That could be made a very interesting sketch by one who had an eye to the comic side of that sort of performance, but to me it looks like a criminal waste of money. That I am assured and believe to be true, not only of one improvement, but of hundreds of improvements for which we annually vote money.

I wish that were all, or that even it were the chief objection to appropriations for rivers and harbors as we make them; but unfortunately it is not. Last year we witnessed the extraordinary spectacle of the city of Galveston, in the State of Texas, deliberately petitioning Congress not to make any appropriation in the river and harbor bill for the continuation of the improvement at that great harbor. I say great harbor. I do not speak of it as great because of its size, or the depth of water, or the shelter which naturally exists there for shipping, but I speak of it as a great harbor because it is the nearest point upon tide water for the products of four great and important States. It is the point at which the products of those great States would encounter the world's commerce, and in which those products would be loaded into the bottoms that were to carry them to the foreign market which they are constantly seeking, if that harbor were properly improved, and if it did give facilities equal to the capital which is engaged in commerce upon its banks, and which is there actively, industriously, energetically, and wisely engaged in seeking to extend into that great interior portion of the country the instrumentalities which will enable the grain of that great section to be brought there for foreign shipment and for consumption.

That, as I said, was an extraordinary spectacle. The cry "Give!" "Give!" had at last found a surfeit. Galveston wanted no more of it, and why? Because Galveston had realized that every year, notwithstanding ample and large appropriations had been made for every year for a quarter of the century, the harbor of Galveston had not been improved, and that if anything it had grown worse under the manipulation of the Army engineers. So Galveston was constrained to cry out for a halt, and to ask and beseech Congress to make no more appropriations to be expended as the former ones had been, and to humbly petition Congress to adopt some other method of improvement if that harbor was to be preserved to the commerce of the Gulf of Mexico and the States which lie back of it.

It has been stated in a most cogent report made by the Committee on Commerce of this body at the last session, the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] being the organ of the committee for the purpose of making the report, that all the millions of dollars which have been spent at Galveston might just as well have been dumped into the sand of the Gulf of Mexico and covered up or otherwise destroyed as to have been spent there as we have been doing.

It is more than insinuated that the condition of things existing at Galveston exist at more than one port upon the Atlantic, and that appropriations are sought for by those who represent these localities not with any very abiding faith that they will result in anything good, but because, the system having been adopted, they are afraid to let go, and are living along and seeking after appropriations in the hope that some time something better will come of it than has yet resulted from the expenditure which has been made.

Now, these things being true, not being denied, being apparent and potent to every one, it seems to me that it is time that we call a halt in regard to this class of expenditures. We ought to be able to adopt some plan whereby the money will not only be well spent but improvements and repairs at harbors be made final, or at all events that the improvements sought, the depth of water to be gained, the essential thing to be obtained as the result of the expenditure, shall be had, leaving nothing but the ordinary current work of repairs to be appropriated for in the annual appropriation bill.

So far we have not reached anything that is desirable. So far we have practically nothing to show for all the millions of money which we have spent. There is not a harbor on all our 6,000 miles of coast which is sensibly improved to-day as the result of all the expenditure that has been made. There is not one at which there is not the same urgent cry and demand for more money coming from the reports of the engineers having the work in charge, the cry being just as loud and just as deep and just as urgent as it has been year after year for the past ten or fifteen years, or ever since the particular improvement was undertaken.

This work is carried on substantially without system. Each engineer is a law unto himself. He buys such machinery, such appliances, such buildings as he thinks are necessary, and there is nowhere lodged in the Engineer Department of the Government or elsewhere any authentic knowledge of the amount of property of that kind which the Government to-day owns as the result of the appropriations thus made for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

It was not long since the chief engineer of a work was called on for a report as to the amount of property and the kind of property pertaining to these improvements in the possession of the Government, and he replied that he was totally unable to tell. As I said before, the engineer revolves in his own sphere; he is practically subject to no control. He lets his own contracts; he determines as to whether contracts shall be let to the advantage of the Government or whether the work shall be done by the day. Under the operation of this system there has grown up a network of contractors extending from Alaska to Nova Scotia, having influence in politics, having influence in every direction, and who are found to be powerful enough to constrain the Congress to do that which the Congress knows to be unwise in the way of the expenditure of public money.

Mr. President, I do not object to the amount of money contained in this bill. I have never objected to any river and harbor bill because it contained ten, fifteen, or twenty millions, more or less. Given the necessity for the money; given the ability and the willingness to expend it properly for the purpose of securing the results which are sought, and I am willing to make this bill $50,000,000 each year; but I would rather vote $50,000,000 to obtain results than I would vote

$5,000,000 or $10,000,000 to be cast away, the larger portion of it, as the result, I believe, of the present system of expenditure.

Why should we not select ten, twenty, fifty, or one hundred even, of the more important objects of expenditure, of the more important harbors upon our extended coast, of the more important rivers that traverse the country, and limit the expenditure to those until the improvements are completed, and spend as much money every single year as could be spent with economy in the direction of the completion of the particular improvements?

Mr. President, then, instead of having, as it is said now, millions and millions of dollars' worth of boats, derricks, and machinery of different kinds, and all the variegated plans that the ingenuity of these men with money without judgment has enabled them to get together, rotting and rusting upon more than 10,000 miles, yea, 20,000 miles, of ocean and lake coast and river border, we should have a compact plant, that could be moved from place to place as circumstances required, and the annual loss of which would not go up into the millions as it does now.

I think it is a confession of legislative incompetency to grapple with a subject of this kind, that Congress goes on year after year doing the idle, the vain, and the wicked thing that it does do.

But if the ordinary river and harbor bill is a confession of incompetency, what shall I say about this bill, a bill that contains no items of expenditure, that ignores everything which has been done heretofore, that proceeds upon the hypothesis that everything that was done last year was done illy and badly and so as to bring no results; and therefore that there is absolutely a sum required for each one of the items of expenditures of last year the present year.

We all know how this bantling came to be begotten. We know that after a struggle to satisfy the rapacious and hungry maws of all who clamored for some of the pork the banquet was found too small; there was not enough to go round. It was not within the sum of human ingenuity with all the millions in the Treasury to so adjust it as to satisfy the inordinate and extortionate demands of those who cried "give" and who wanted this money, not because of the public character of the work to be done, but because there was in it the element of local benefit; and thus in an effort to compromise among these contending factions, after giving away all pretense of any public concern or of any public object to be obtained in the bill, in this vain effort to satisfy everybody all being put upon one platform, the original bill had to be abandoned; and this monstrosity was sent to us with the statement accompanying it that it was expected the Senate would raise it. And then to avoid that same contention and scramble which had characterized the consideration of the original bill this was to be thrust upon the country by means of a committee of conference in the last hours of this session of Congress.

I had strong hopes that the Senate would not consent to such a piece of legislation. I felt as though I might from this vantage-ground properly characterize the action of other people elsewhere, but I do believe that I shall not do so without also characterizing this body, which seems to have given itself up to this same scramble, to this determination that there shall be a perpetuation of the old abuses, and that there shall be no reform in this method of expenditure of the public money.

I had it in mind to move some amendment, thinking possibly that in doing that I could make the bill better; but there are some expenditures in the West of a kind that can hardly wait that ought to be made, and yet I do not care to commit myself to anything, either to this bill as a work of art or to its plan or to any plan of any kind heretofore in use for this purpose. On the public grounds of the Fort Leavenworth military reservation there has been going on for years a great destruction of most valuable property by the ravages of the Missouri River. No attention has been paid to them. There have been found enough who would band themselves together to pass bills of this sort without giving any attention to a needed public improvement or to any sensible method of treating a great emergency.

Not only that, but at and near the second city of the State of Missouri, which unfortunately is also the commercial entrepôt for the State of Kansas, private property amounting to millions is daily threatened with destruction because of the fact that the men who have had charge of the improvement of that river, the money voted, as money has been voted for other places in these river and harbor bills, have loitered and lingered and magnified their office and dallied, as is their wont, year after year, doing nothing.

Three years ago when we made an appropriation for the Missouri River the engineer to whom that money was committed proceeded to purchase with it plant, and absolutely absorbed nearly every dollar of the $100,000 appropriated for that river in the purchase of plant. One would have supposed that with the millions which had already gone into that turbid stream there would have been somewhere some adequate plant; but no, the first opportunity was availed of to buy more, more boats, more machinery, more of the appliances supposed to be useful, and when they were purchased there was no money left for the improvement of the river, and for two years that plant thus purchased rotted and rusted away. It was the old story of a dollar for the dress and $10 for the trimming; millions for plant and not a cent for improvement.

That, I am satisfied, is not a solitary case; and while that has been going on this great river has been carrying away from its banks property to the amount of millions in value, and the people have been waiting and hoping and expecting that some time this circumlocution system would bring them a relief that has been often promised only to have the promise broken.

Mr. President, it would be a wise thing if Congress should refuse to pass this bill or any other such bill at this session, that it should then determine upon some plan whereby we may know what we need to do, and adapt the appliances necessary for the performance of the work; but so long as we go on appropriating money upon the basis on which we do appropriate it, giving every year millions of dollars to be thus sunk, thus wasted, we shall continue to do it, and nothing but a halt, nothing but a thorough investigation and overturning of the present system (which can only come when there is a halt) will ever bring us any nearer either to harbors or a fair, an honest, a decent administration of the public money.

I know I am talking to minds that are made up, and that this bill is ordained to go through and, I fear, become a law, and thus next year, and probably the succeeding year, we shall be confronted with the same condition of things; and yet, Mr. President, I do not feel as though I could discharge the duty that devolves upon me as one of those persons to whom is committed the responsibility of that portion of legislation which attaches to the Senate unless I did express my judgment, honest and as I believe not at all mistaken, in regard to the vice that inheres in this bill and all similar bills for the alleged improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I apologize to the Senator from Kansas for the wonderful effect he has been able to produce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Senator from Michigan will do better. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. To most of us it was only a tiresome and nettling kind of a speech, but I suppose very likely to those who sympathize with his effort to talk against time and kill this bill by loud voice and loud talk it was soothing. It did not entice me to respond because I did not agree with the Senator.

Mr. President, the Senator has reported several appropriation bills, more or less, and some, I think, at this session, and has come in with conference reports here toward the latter end of the time, proposed them as conference reports in the discharge of his duty upon the order of the Senate, and pressed them to a vote and to a conclusion one way or the other in the regular order of business so that Senators might say whether they desired the passage of a bill by concurrence in a conference report. I want to know if I had stood here last night and yesterday when he was presenting those reports and had talked and talked and talked till God was ashamed of me and the Senate scorned me, and had thus prevented the passage of appropriation bills necessary to carry on this Government, what would the Senator have thought of me?

Senators here desire to vote on this bill one way or the other, I do not know how. They have refused on three several occasions by a ye-and-nay vote to lay this bill upon the table and dispose of it in that way. They wanted a vote. Just as fast as we approach a vote the Senator from Nebraska, himself a power, himself able to resist the whole Senate, ay, the whole universe, in his talk, must needs be backed up by the Senator from Kansas to talk against time.

I noticed that the Senator from Nebraska was compelled to leave the Chamber just at the moment the Senator from Kansas took the floor and talked until his return. Now I do not complain of that. The rules of the Senate permit this talking. I know of no rule that can prevent me talking until 12 o'clock to-day and defeating the passage of every conference report and every bill, even if the Senator from Kansas reported them himself. But does that give me and does that give the other Senators who desire to vote upon a bill, to vote one way or the other, some in favor of its passage and some opposed to it—does that give us any fair chance as Senators, an equal chance in legislation, or any opportunity to satisfy our constituents that we have tried to do according to our judgment what we think they desire.

If there is any one thing that in my judgment is not bold and is not courageous, it is to take advantage of the absence of law and of power to compel forward the business of the Senate, to defeat brother Senators and deprive them of the opportunity of expressing their will, and by talking against time to prevent a vote for or against a measure. But the Senator has the right to do it. We have no rule that will compel the immediate consideration and vote upon any proposition.

But I pass that subject. The Senator from Kansas talks modestly, as if he supposed this bill could be passed. He knows that it can not be passed. He knows that he has the power to stand here and prevent Senators from voting upon this bill, and it is a mockery to tell us that we can pass the bill. I do not complain of this. It is the method and the manner that I complain of.

Mr. President, I am not surprised at this result. I have been told by those who pretend to know that the great improvement in transportation by deepening the water courses and improving the harbors of our lakes and of our rivers that permit a vessel carrying coal or iron or lumber to be loaded down to fifteen and sixteen feet where a few years ago it could only carry eight or ten or twelve feet draught at the most is interfering with railroads so much that they are alarmed at the competition which this great and grand system of improvements of water courses and river and lake navigation makes successful against railroads.

I do not know how they exert their influence; I do not know what measures they are taking to stop these grand improvements for the common people of the country; I do not know who their agents are—I have not been told; I do not know what kind of influences are thrown out and around to prevent the grand system of internal improvements from going forward and blessing the country as they have, but I was warned not only last year but this year that a combined effort would be made by some of the railroad monopolies to break down this system of competing water-line improvements. I think the work is going on.

A little bird whispers in my ear that the powers are moving—how, by what means, through whose energies I am utterly unable to say or even to conjecture. But the time has come now when this system of improvements for the people of the country against the monopolies of the country is having its effect in the Senate and in Congress. How long it will last, whether another year we can have an appropriation, whether these improvements shall continue to bless the people and cheapen transportation I can not tell. In my humble judgment the great conflict has commenced and is being carried on between the tremendous monopolies of the United States and the people's right of way over the water courses, God's highway on the land.

Somebody influences the opposition to these bills, somebody is to be hurt by the passage of these bills, somebody under one pretense or another urges the influence throughout the country, which you see in the newspapers and which you hear in conversation, urging that the improvement of rivers and harbors is a failure in this law, that it is all so badly managed, all so inefficient, there is so much waste, that the system had better be abandoned.

I had hoped we might come to a vote upon this bill; I had hoped even the bare chance of sending it back to the House for concurrence in the amendment might have been given to its friends, who are a majority of the Senate; but that seems not to be possible. I desire, however, the friends of this measure, as far as they feel disposed to do so, to stand by the bill in the interest not of monopolies but of the great improvements of the people of the United States, until it shall become evident who seeks to destroy it, so that the people in their own boats and on their own highways, free from toll to the capital of the nation, may discern who it is refuses to improve their highways and refuses to give them additional means of cheap transportation.

Why, sir, every eye is looking day by day to see what Congress will do, and whether all the legislation of this land is to be for the powerful and the wealthy and the corporations, or whether the rivers and the bays and the lakes and the harbors that give refuge to the poor sailor in the storm shall be improved and give greater facility of transportation, and give greater security in the tempest and in the storm.

But we are not to be permitted to have a vote. The great majority of the Senate are desirous to vote upon this question. I tell these Senators you are not to be permitted to have a vote. The debate is not for information, not to make amendments, not to improve the bill, but you are not to be permitted to vote upon it, and talking is the easiest way to prevent a vote.

Mr. PLUMB obtained the floor.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me to make a report?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I present the conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill.

The report was read, as follows:

And the Senate agree to the same.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After said amendment insert as a new paragraph the following:

EUGENE HALE,

W. B. ALLISON,

F. M. COCKRELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES N. BURNES,

JOHN D. LONG,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HALE. I move that the report be concurred in.
The motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8280) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. At the close of nearly two days' consideration of the river and harbor bill, without having said a word or made a motion or done anything at all except to vote upon the various motions on which the yeas and nays were taken, I made a speech of thirty minutes. The Senator from Michigan, who was so anxious to pass this bill, started in with a speech, I think, of about two hours in length, and he replied to me, in what I can not but consider as complimentary to the effort I made, in a speech of about the same length as mine.

I would be willing to leave, on that mere statement, the facts to the judgment of the Senate as to which had been the best friend of the river and harbor bill. But I desire to go further and say that when, in commencing my remarks, I disclaimed any intention of doing anything that should unnecessarily detain the Senate from the consideration of this bill I said exactly the truth. I had no intention of talking against it to consume time, and I did not know but that the Senator from Michigan was expecting that it would pass and become a law, because I could not attribute to any other feeling than that his effort to have it passed.

I shall not now, or at any other time, I hope, bandy epithets with the Senator from Michigan or any other Senator. I did not think he would do himself the injustice—because he would not be unjust to any one else—to repeat in this Chamber the idle and unfounded rumors that from time to time have been uttered about influences which affect the action of men on this floor. I think as he reflects on that he will be less and less satisfied with what he has said, either as a matter of courtesy to a brother Senator or as a matter of what is due to a body of which he is a very important and prominent member.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is some executive business that ought to be transacted, as I am advised. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The doors will be closed; and, pursuant to the order of the Senate, the Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the Senate wing of the Capitol of all persons not entitled to admission thereto.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after thirty-two minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8239) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, Mr. WALDO HUTCHINS of New York, and Mr. J. D. LONG of Massachusetts managers at the further conference on its part.

ERNEST H. WARDWELL.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask the Senate to take up House bill 3236.

Mr. DOLPH. I object. I call for the regular order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] was very earnest in his appeal at one time this evening to have a little bill passed which is not a pension bill but in the nature of one, being for the benefit of a Federal soldier. It will take only a moment to pass it, and I wish the Senate would consent to let the bill pass.

Mr. DOLPH. I have been here all night. I should like to have made a speech upon the bill that is regularly under consideration, but I have not opened my mouth, hoping to get a vote. If the Senator from South Carolina has a bill that he desires to call up and it will not interfere with the bill under consideration, I shall be glad to give way; but if the Senator from Nebraska has any interest in it, after what has transpired to-night, I shall not consent.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I would not either if I were you.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to say anything myself on this bill, but as it is known to the Senator from South Carolina the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] desires to be heard on it when it is taken up, I have sent to the committee-room to see if he is there, as I promised to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3236) for the relief of Ernest H. Wardwell.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the report in that case made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] may be read.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask for the reading of the House report.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator is willing to wait until the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] comes in, I shall not take any part in this.

Mr. HAMPTON. The Senator from Missouri is coming in now.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the Senator from South Carolina the House report?

Mr. HAMPTON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will he send it to the desk?

Mr. COCKRELL. I would prefer that the Senator's own report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Chief Clerk that there is no Senate report.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Chair has not got it, I can send it to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate now, in view of the attempt to pass this bill, to pay attention to the report made by the Senator from South Carolina, which states the facts and the record in this case. The report is not very long.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, April 16, 1884.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask that the reading of that report may be dispensed with, for I find the bill will lead to opposition and I am not disposed to take up the time of the Senate in a discussion which I suppose will cause the defeat of the bill. But before doing so I wish to say that the report which was being read was made in April last, at the last session, an adverse report, before papers were referred to the committee which changed my mind, and when they were recommitted changed the opinion of the committee who authorized and directed me to make favorable report. This man, while technically not entitled to pay, I believe by all the rules of justice and right is entitled to it; and I think if the function of the Senate is to sit as a court of equity to do justice in such matters, the bill ought to pass. I withdraw the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be returned to the Calendar if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to state that information from the House indicates that it will be impossible for perhaps an hour and a half, or at least an hour, to have returned to the Senate the sundry civil appropriation bill, which is the only appropriation bill now in conference, except the navy bill, which will probably be disposed of shortly. I therefore ask unanimous consent—

Mr. COCKRELL. What about the legislative bill?

Mr. ALLISON. The legislative bill will take no further time. I ask unanimous consent now that the Senate may be considered in session only for the purpose of appointing committees of conference.

Mr. CONGER. I object to unanimous consent being granted, and demand the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan demands the regular order, which is the river and harbor bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, we came to the understanding before we went into executive session that three or four pension bills about which we had arrived at a substantial agreement should be passed, in analogy to the action of the Senate on other like bills. There are but four of them which should be taken up and disposed of. I ask that that may be done now. I have watched and waited a long time, and I think it is perhaps due to me that these bills should now be disposed of. They are very short. It will not take over five minutes to dispose of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs leave to state to Senators that the doors of the Senate will be open, and of course the Senate will have to go on with business; but the only time to put the Senate Chamber in order for the inauguration of the President of the United States is between now and the time when the Senate will begin again its regular session, within an hour and a half. The Chair thinks it is his duty to call the attention of Senators to that fact. The Senate Chamber must of course be put in order; but having said that the Chair of course will make no motion or order.

Mr. BLAIR. Allow me until 8 o'clock and I will trouble the Senate no more with these bills. I only ask five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that pension bills be considered for five minutes.

Mr. CONGER. I desire one more effort to have a vote on the pending bill. It has been said by gentlemen who oppose it that as far as they are concerned they will make dilatory talk no longer, and I desire a vote.

The Chair will appreciate how I feel about this. For ten or twelve long hours I have stood at my post seeking to perform my duty, having reported this bill from a respectable committee of this House, however poor a service they may have done in that business, yielding continually for all pension bills, so there is not a single unobjected pension bill on the Calendar, and I have yielded from time to time to every demand on the assurance of my friends, at least, that we would come to a vote before giving this up. I ask a vote. I do not think there will be a division on this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that if we undertake to vote on this bill or any other bill that is controverted it will be disclosed by the vote that there is no quorum. If the Senator will yield to me I will venture to make a motion that the Senate take a recess until half past 9.

Mr. CONGER. I will consent to lay the bill temporarily aside not to lose its regular order, for two purposes, one to allow the Senator from Iowa to make the motion he wishes to make, and another to allow the Senator from New Hampshire to get through his pension bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the river and harbor bill will be temporarily laid aside, to be the regular order on call.

FRANCES M'NEIL POTTER.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask to take up Calendar number 1016, being House bill 4822.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear what the case is before we consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be reported. The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 4822) for the relief of Frances McNeil Potter."

Mr. BLAIR. It is an increase of pension from $20 to $30 a month. It is the case of a lady now old. She has been pensioned at the rate of $20. She lost her son in the late war, and was the daughter of a very distinguished officer in the war of 1812. She is quite old and feeble, and this is an increase of $10 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill is reported adversely, and I hope the Senator will not insist on taking up these adverse reports.

Mr. BLAIR. It is one of the cases which were controverted by some members; but the Senate committee have substantially agreed to make no further contest, but take the action of the Senate as an instruction on this and three other like cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. The action of the Senate when there is no quorum means nothing, and I do hope the Senator will not press this bill with so much pertinacity. If he does I am compelled to stop the transaction of any business until there is a quorum. The Senate is not competent to do business unless there is a quorum, and if the Senator insists upon taking up these adverse cases I shall ask for a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is now 8 o'clock, and the Chair begs again to appeal to Senators to consent that business be suspended, except for the purpose of appointing conferees, in order that the Chamber may be put in order for the ceremonies the Senate has ordered to take place here. It is advisable, if it is to be done, that it should be done now.

DISCOVERY OF THE HUDSON RIVER.

Mr. HAWLEY. On the 28th day of February the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] presented the petition of Gideon J. Tucker, an honorable citizen of New York, calling attention to certain alleged inaccurate statements in a book with which the Senate is very familiar: "The Public Domain: its history, with statistics. Public Land Commission; Committee on Codification. Prepared by Thomas Donaldson, of the commission and committee. * * * Prepared in pursuance of a joint resolution of Congress approved August 7, 1882. Washington: Government Printing Office, 1884."

The letter from Mr. Tucker was read in the Senate and referred to the Committee on the Library. Some of his remarks and criticisms were exceedingly severe. The gentleman, Mr. Donaldson, who prepared that book under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, sends to me for presentation to the Senate and the Library Committee, with Mr. Tucker's letter, his brief and courteous response. I will not ask that it be read; I vouch for its being courteous and proper in every respect from a gentleman. I ask that this, with my statement, be inserted in the RECORD, and that the letter of Mr. Donaldson be then referred to the Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection it will be so ordered.
The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 3, 1885.

DEAR SIR: Answering the petition of correction of Mr. Gideon J. Tucker, a citizen of New York, referred to your committee by the Senate February 28, 1885, in relation to alleged errors in the work known as the Public Domain, compiled by myself, I have the honor to say that corrections of error in this work are a pleasure. My attention has before been called to errors, which have been promptly corrected, and I expect that more will be detected in the future.

The two clauses on page 30 which have stirred Mr. Tucker to become the tuncful muse of history and to be the vindicator of her truth will also be corrected. The summary of colonization on page 30 (part of two clauses of which are objected to) is merely illustrative of the rapidity of immigration to the New World and the rage to colonize, and was inserted to show in part why so many overlapping and duplicate grants were made. It relates to colonization by Dutch as well as English.

On page 42 will be found under title "New York—colonization," in detail, the main facts of her colonization. This and other similar statements were inserted to show how title was obtained to the lands of the Colonies (subsequently States) some of which transferred their western possessions to the United States, which possessions now form a large portion of the Public Domain.

The historical data it was intended should be correctly stated. The authorities cited on page 55, with the addition of O'Callaghan's History of New York, the publications of the New York Historical Society, and several others, were used for reference, and the alleged erroneous matter obtained from some of them. The limits of this paper prevent discussion of historical matters, neither would it be profitable or of interest to the integrity of the publication.

The corrections shall be made in the next edition on page 30, so as to conform to the data on page 42, to the end that it be shown that Mr. Tucker and his 2,000,000 friends, descendants of the Hollanders, who bought New York and Manhattan Island for $24 from the Indians instead of obtaining license to settle from King James I, are Dutchmen who purchased land, and not Dutchmen who squatted on English land, or received favors from an English King.

Very respectfully,

THOMAS DONALDSON.

Hon. JOHN SHEPHERD,

United States Senate, Chairman Committee on the Library.

Mr. HAWLEY. I may add in passing just a word. Part of the controversy referred, if I recollect aright, to the alleged discovery of the Hudson River by Hendrick Hudson. A late history of Albany, by Mr. Weise, discloses the fact, I believe not fully announced before, that one Giovanni Verazzano, an Italian, under the patronage of the Dutch government, discovered the Hudson River some time before the famous Hendrick Hudson, in the year 1524. I wish to say that this letter is presented by me after consultation with the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Library.

SUSPENSION OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ALLISON (at 8 o'clock a. m., on Wednesday, March 4). I ask unanimous consent that no further business be done until half past 9 o'clock, but that the Senate in the mean time be considered in session for the purpose of appointing conferees only.

Mr. BLAIR. I object. There may be a quorum between now and half past 9. ["Oh, no!"]

Mr. COCKRELL. There will be no business done by the Senate even if there is a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection it will be understood that there will be no other business done but receiving reports of conference committees until half past 9 o'clock, and that the Senate is to be considered in session for that purpose and for no other.

Mr. BLAIR. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is ordered accordingly.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. CONGER. What is the regular order of business?

Mr. FRYE. The river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). The regular order is the bill (H. R. 8280) making appropriations for the preservation and continuation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill the title of which has been named be taken up and passed.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill just read by its title be taken up and by unanimous consent considered as read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the bill the title of which has just been read shall be taken up and considered as read the third time and passed.

Mr. PLATT. I raise the point of order that the bill can not be passed in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CONGER. I have not heard the point of order stated.

Mr. PLATT. The bill can not be passed in that way.

Mr. CONGER. I heard the Senator make a point of order, but I could not hear what it was so as to answer.

CHRISTOPHER PHILLIPS.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I move to take up the resolution I offered yesterday recommending the payment of a sum of money to Christopher Phillips for services.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that a resolution, which will be read for information, be taken from the table and considered.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, heretofore submitted by Mr. MORGAN:

Resolved, That the sum of $41 be paid to Christopher Phillips out of the contingent fund of the Senate for labor performed for the Senate under employment of the Sergeant-at-Arms from November 10 to December 1, 1884.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CONGER. Let the river and harbor bill be informally laid aside that this may be considered, not to lose its place in the order of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the business pending when the active business of the Senate was suspended by unanimous consent. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 8280) making appropriations for the preservation and continuation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Now I ask for a vote on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no further amendment be proposed the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the bill do lie on the table.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONGER. Not with this motion pending.

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks leave to withdraw his motion to lay on the table. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill be informally laid aside.

Mr. CONGER. For what purpose?

Mr. HOAR. Because there is an obvious impropriety in attempting to take up time with it now.

Mr. CONGER. One Senator is responsible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill being informally laid aside?

Mr. CONGER. I know of no other business to occupy the attention of the Senate, and I should like a vote on the bill. The Senate has been waiting during the whole of the last twenty-four hours for an opportunity to have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLUMB. I renew the motion that the bill do lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the bill lie on the table.

Mr. CONGER. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. Not knowing how he would vote if he were present, I shall not vote.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 141, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$200,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. ALLISON. As they were inserted by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8236) relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8239) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

DISTRICT TAX SALES.

Mr. ALDRICH. I present the conference report on House bill 8236. The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8236) entitled "An act relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, substituting for the words stricken out by the Senate the words "and the affidavit hereinafter required," and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out the following words:

"Provided further, That where the commissioners are satisfied that any lot is the actual homestead of the owner and that it comprises the principal portion of his estate, they may accept a sum in full payment of the same, not less than one-half of the assessed value of the lot."

And insert the following:

"Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect pending suits." And the Senate agree to the same.

NELSON W. ALDRICH,
JOHN J. INGALLS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
LOUIS E. MCCOMAS,
JOHN F. FOLLETT,
W. L. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the reading of amendment No. 1, to which the House has disagreed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). The Senator from Alabama calls for the reading of amendment No. 1. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3, after the word "taxes," the Senate struck out the words "or assessments;" so as to read:

That hereafter sales of real estate, after advertisement as required by law, by the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia, for taxes levied by the commissioners of said District, or by other lawful authority, shall entitle the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, if the property be not redeemed within two years from the date of such sale, as provided by law, to a deed from the commissioners of the District, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Rhode Island is that the Senate concur in the report of the conference committee.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, if I understand that, the agreement between the conferees of the House and the Senate keeps in the words in respect of special assessments. I object to the concurrence of the Senate in the amendment proposed by the conference committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not able to hear what the Senator says.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate please be in order and cease conversation? The Senator from Alabama can not be heard.

Mr. MORGAN. The point I make is this: The Senate struck out so much of the bill as included "special assessments," and I understand that the report of the committee of conference restores those words to the bill. If that be the fact, I am opposed to concurring in the report. I do not know that I need to amplify the reasons; the Senate understands the reasons. It was somewhat discussed last night and I supposed it was thoroughly understood. I hope that the Senate will not concur in restoring the words stricken out by the Senate from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read again for a better understanding of the point.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3, after the word "takes," the Senate struck out the words "or assessments."

Mr. MORGAN. Do I understand that the House refuses to strike out those words?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. The words are retained in the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I hope the Senate will not adopt the report, but that we shall further insist upon that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the report of the committee of conference?

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for a separate vote on the first amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that that vote can not be taken, but it must be taken on the motion to concur.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I hope the Senate will not concur in the report.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. The amendment is more important than any other part of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. That bill was passed this morning by the Senate with the express understanding that the words "or assessments" should be stricken out, and they were stricken out in the Senate, and then a conference was ordered on the part of the Senate, and the conference committee left the Senate and went into conference and agreed to restore the very words without the striking out of which the bill could not have passed the Senate to-day. It could not have been called up. It was only by consent and agreement that those words should be stricken out that the bill was enabled to be called up and acted upon. Now I ask the Senate to refuse to concur in the report, for I say it is contrary to the understanding and agreement and instruction to the conference committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was not present in the Senate at the time this bill was taken up and passed, and know nothing of any understanding in regard to this amendment. I was placed upon the conference committee, and found that the House would not agree to this amendment, and the Senate conferees were obliged to yield. The chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia called the bill up, and if there was any such understanding in appointing the conferees he probably is aware of it. I know of no such understanding. I will say further, in reply to the Senator from Michigan, that the bill is right, and that it is worth nothing without those words. The bill might as well fail as to pass with those words left out.

Mr. BAYARD. I think it much better that the bill should fail than that it should pass without a very full understanding of its provisions. It affects the property of a great number of very poor people, and however desirable it may be to collect taxes it is not well to collect them at the cost of injustice. I hope the report will not be concurred in.

Mr. ALDRICH. All the amendments offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] are retained in the bill; all the amendments offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and all the other amendments affording additional protection and guards to tax-payers are retained in the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill in the shape in which it is now presented to the Senate is simply a decree of forfeiture of the lands of some poor people in the city of Washington for the purpose of speculators. When this bill was called by the Senate last night objection was made to its being taken up. Thereupon Senators concerned on both sides agreed to take it up on the express understanding that these words were to be stricken out of the bill.

This bill has been pending in the Senate for several days. Amendments were offered and adopted by the Senate of an important character. When the bill was called up again for its final passage I had the honor of objecting to its being taken up out of its order for consideration. So the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, in charge of the bill, had a conference with other Senators on this subject, and we agreed that these words should be stricken out of the bill; and under that condition this bill was taken up and put on its passage without further objection, and a committee of conference was immediately asked by the Senator who moved the bill. That is a somewhat novel proceeding; at the same time I think it is entirely legitimate; but the action of the Senate on the motion of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia in striking out these words should have been considered and received by this committee of conference as an instruction that they should insist that these words should go out. This bill would never have passed the Senate with those words in it. The body of the Senate, I am quite satisfied, would have resisted the passage of a measure which would have taken from these people their homes.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me?

Mr. GEORGE. We can not hear a word the Senator from Alabama is saying. It is a very important question, and I should like to hear him.

Mr. MORGAN. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the matter under consideration be laid aside informally for the purpose of taking up a bill which has just reached here from the House on a subject that the Senate has also passed a bill upon; but this is the only way in which to reach a conclusion. It is in regard to a lost certificate of deposit for one of the banks in Indiana, and is a matter in which the Finance Committee has been consulted and on which the House has acted. It is a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate certificate of deposit to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind.

Mr. ALDRICH. In view of the evident intention to prolong the discussion upon the conference report, I will consent that it shall lay aside and will not ask any action, disclaiming at the same time any understanding or agreement, so far as I was concerned and which came within my knowledge, that this amendment was to be yielded to in committee or elsewhere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island agreed to that the conference report submitted by him lie on the table? The Chair hears no objection, and such will be the order.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8256) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PEOPLE'S NATIONAL BANK OF LAWRENCEBURG, IND.

Mr. VOORHEES. I now ask—

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7706) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate certificate of deposit to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind.

Mr. VOORHEES. I renew my request for the consideration of the bill just received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] asks the Senate to take up a bill on the table, the title of which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 7706) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate certificate of deposit to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind."

By unanimous consent, the bill was read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER. I can not hear a word of the bill. Will the Senator state briefly what the bill is?

Mr. VOORHEES. It is a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate for a lost certificate of deposit to one of the banks in Indiana.

Mr. CONGER. All right.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 6760) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Rock Island, Ill., and Davenport, Iowa, and to establish it as a post-route; and

A bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GROOME, it was Ordered, That J. H. Kelley have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in support of the bill to incorporate the North Capitol and Glenwood Cemetery Horse Railroad Company, subject to the rules of the Senate.

RETIRED GENERAL OF THE ARMY.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2530) to authorize an additional appointment on the retired-list of the Army.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that the bill just received from the House of Representatives may be read at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). The Senator from Kansas asks that the bill just received from the House of Representatives be read at length. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read the bill at length.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint on the retired-list of the Army of the United States, from among those who have been Generals commanding the Army of the United States or Generals-in-Chief of said Army, one person with the rank and full pay of such General or General-in-Chief, as the case may be; and the total number now allowed by law to compose said retired-list shall be, on such appointment, increased accordingly.

[Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the nation knows who that "one person" means. I ask unanimous consent that the reference of this bill to a committee be waived and that it now be considered by the Senate.

Several SENATORS. It is a Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a Senate bill, and the House has passed it without amendment. No further action, in the opinion of the Chair, is necessary. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

SPRINGER of Illinois, Mr. S. S. COX of New York, and Mr. T. B. REED of Maine were appointed the committee on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 2530) to authorize an additional appointment on the retired-list; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

[The announcement of the signature of the President pro tempore was received with great applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

GENERAL ULYSSES S. GRANT.

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message in writing from the President, which will be read:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
President pro tempore of the Senate of the United States:

SIR: The accompanying communication, although an executive message, may be read in open session.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

WASHINGTON, March 3, 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The accompanying communication will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I nominate Ulysses S. Grant, formerly commanding the armies of the United States, to be General on the retired-list of the Army, with the full pay of such rank.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANNION,
 Washington, March 3, 1885.

[Great applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Manifestations of applause are entirely irregular. The Chair asks unanimous consent that this nomination be now considered with open doors. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is: Will the Senate advise and consent to this appointment? The Senators in the affirmative will say "ay."

The response was unanimously in the affirmative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The "ayes" have it unanimously. [Great applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. CONGER. I move that the President be notified of the action of the Senate on that last nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be entered if there be no objection.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MORRILL and Mr. HARRIS, of the joint committee who were appointed to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that Congress was ready to adjourn, appeared at the bar of the Senate, and,

Mr. MORRILL said: Mr. President, the joint committee appointed to notify the President of the United States that the Senate and House of Representatives were about to close their business by a final adjournment have performed that duty, and have been informed by the President that he has no further communication to make.

SWEARING IN OF VICE-PRESIDENT.

The Vice-President-elect (Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana) entered the Chamber, accompanied by Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. RANSOM, and Mr. HAWLEY, members of the committee of arrangements for the inauguration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, the Chair has the pleasure to announce that the Vice-President of the United States elect is in the Senate Chamber, and, if agreeable to him, the Chair will administer to him the oath of office.

Thereupon Mr. HENDRICKS took and subscribed the oath prescribed by law, and was conducted to a seat at the right of the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, we now close another epoch in the course of the Republic under the Constitution. The brief period of our national existence has, by the exertion of the co-ordinated forces of national and State systems, brought the experiment of free social and political government to an established and secure triumph.

I think I may safely say for us all that we believe that the long years to come in the future of the Republic will more and more increase the peace, liberty, order, and security of all the people of our country.

But perhaps it may not be improper for me to say that, in view of our recent experience, it may be doubted whether Congress can congratulate itself on being the best example of a legislative body conducting its business with that deliberate and timely diligence which is the inseparable handmaid of wisdom and justice, as well in the making as in the administration of laws. It is I think an evil of large and growing proportions that measures of the greatest importance, requiring much time for proper examination and discussion in detail, are brought to our consideration so late that it is not possible to deal with them intelligently, and which we are tempted (overtaken I fear) to enact into laws in the hope that fortune rather than time, study, and reflection will take care that the Republic suffer no detriment.

The Chair has heard with deep sensibility of the resolution you have kindly adopted concerning the administration of his duties, and he begs to express sincerely his gratitude for it. If, in the course of the execution of his duties, he has (as he sometimes may have done) wounded the feelings of any Senator or officer of the Senate, he can truly say that he has not intentionally given offense to any one; and in closing this session of the Senate he assures every Senator, whether retiring or continuing in public duty, that he wishes for him every friendly good wish, and hopes that he may long enjoy all the happiness that can be realized by citizen or Senator.

He now declares the Senate adjourned without day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 3, 1885.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, is it in order at this time, before the Journal is read, to move to take a recess? If so, I desire to make a motion to take a recess until 10 o'clock to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] moves that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-night. The Chair desires to state that, owing to the fact that the House was in almost continuous session from 11 o'clock yesterday until 4 o'clock this morning, the Journal is not completed.

A MEMBER. How soon will it be completed?

The SPEAKER. In about two hours, the Chair is informed.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with for the present.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the reading of the Journal will be dispensed with until it is prepared.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to suspend the rules and adopt an amendment to the rules of the House, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask that my motion be put to the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Pending a motion to suspend the rules there is but one motion—to adjourn—in order.

The SPEAKER. But the motion to suspend the rules is objected to because the gentleman from Nebraska insists on the regular order, which is the motion to take a recess.

Mr. VALENTINE. I insist upon that motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, as soon as the reading of the Journal is dispensed with is not a motion to suspend the rules in order?

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is out of order.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order. In the first place, a contested-election case is pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then the Chair holds that this is the pending question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so holds. The House decided on yesterday to consider the case, and the question was stated to the House in the form provided by the rules, that is by the reading aloud at the Clerk's desk of the resolution reported from the Committee on Elections. Pending that question the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] moves that the House take a recess. Now, even if the motion to take a recess were not pending, a motion to suspend the rules could not be entertained at this time if the regular order were insisted upon.

Mr. SPRINGER. The regular order being the contested-election case.

Mr. VALENTINE. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is before the House; but pending that, a motion to take a recess and a motion to adjourn are in order under the rules.

Mr. LEWIS. But can there not be a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The difficulty is that there is a motion pending before the House; and pending that, a motion to suspend the rules can not be made if objected to. It can be done by unanimous consent, and the Chair has, upon two or three occasions, recognized gentlemen connected with appropriation bills to ask for unanimous consent to suspend the rules and the unanimous consent has been granted. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I desire to inquire whether, under the new rule assigning an hour each day immediately after the reading of the Journal for the consideration of bills to which there are not ten or more objections, that hour does not take precedence over the unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks a contested-election case, being a matter of the highest privilege under the Constitution, is in order at all times, unless by unanimous consent, after the House has once determined to proceed with its consideration and after the question has been stated to the House, as was done in this case yesterday.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Does the Chair place that decision upon the ground that the election case is unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. Unfinished business, and also a privileged matter of the highest character, except reports from committees of conference.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Does either of these take precedence of the positive rule of the House that immediately after the reading of the Journal there shall be an hour set apart for the consideration of bills to which not more than ten members object?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is a matter of the highest privilege, and, if insisted upon, it must be regarded as entitled to the floor. That has been the universal practice of the House. When the House has once engaged in the consideration of the contested-election case, it has gone on with it day after day immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Is that the case as against the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. Against everything except reports from conference committees, which under another rule of the House are in order at all times except when the Journal is being read, when the roll is being called, and when the House is dividing. The regular order is insisted upon.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to inquire whether by unanimous consent a resolution could be introduced for reference to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent anything can be done.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent—

Mr. O'FERRALL. I object.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 449) to provide for the appraisement and sale of lots in Peru, Dubuque County, Iowa;

A bill (H. R. 652) for the relief of Brannin, Summers & Co.;

A bill (H. R. 4089) to empower the commissioners of the District of Columbia to examine the claim of and providing for the payment of Outerbridge Horsey, assignee;

A bill (S. 2577) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Henry B. Anthony; and

A bill (S. 2666) to provide for the printing of the report and proceedings of the commission to provide suitable ceremonies for the dedication of the Washington Monument.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 8256) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BECK.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submits a personal request on behalf of a gentleman who is absent from the House on account of sickness.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THROCKMORTON asks leave to print in the RECORD remarks on his educational bill.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock this evening.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend that motion by striking out "10" and inserting "9."

Mr. CONVERSE. I rise to a point of order. My point is that after the motion was made last evening to take a recess until 9 o'clock the House adjourned, and therefore that motion is not the pending question.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. CONVERSE. But the question is on the demand for the previous question, as made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has not demanded the previous question.

Mr. CONVERSE. I so understood him.

Mr. VALENTINE. He never did make that motion. My motion is pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the situation; there is no difficulty about it under the rules. When the House took a recess until 9 o'clock this morning all other motions for a recess of course fell; and certainly when the House adjourned this morning all motions then pending for a recess fell. But as soon as the House reassembled, and immediately after the reading of the Journal was for the present dis-passed with, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] made a motion that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock this evening. That motion is now pending.

Mr. CONVERSE. I understood the gentleman to claim that it was unfinished business.

Mr. VALENTINE. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair decided that the contested-election case was unfinished business. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] moves to amend the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska by striking out "10" and inserting "9."

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "9" and inserting "8."

The question being taken on Mr. PETTIBONE's amendment to the amendment there were—ayes 4, noes 41.

Mr. VALENTINE. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. VALENTINE and Mr. SPRINGER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported none in the affirmative, 75 in the negative.

Mr. VALENTINE. No quorum.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a question of personal privilege. I demand that the rules of this House for which we have such a profound reverence shall be enforced; and I ask for the reading of the seventh paragraph of the fourteenth commandment of the House of Representatives. [Laughter.] I can not sit here and have gentlemen smoke all the time in the area in the rear of the seats.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the clause of the rule indicated by the gentleman; and the Chair will call the special attention of members and officers of the House to this rule, because the matter to which the gentleman from Colorado has referred is one about which frequent complaints are made to the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no member shall walk out of or across the Hall, nor, when a member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause.

Mr. BELFORD. Now I ask that the Speaker, who is the organ of this House, shall direct the Sergeant-at-Arms under that rule to enforce its requirement. The general place of smoking is right in the rear of where I sit; and I say we should be exempt from this nuisance at least until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to insist upon the enforcement of the rule. It is the duty of the officers of the House named in the rule to see that it is enforced; and the Chair has only a day or two ago directed those officers to see that it is rigidly executed, because there is very great complaint to the Chair almost every day of the session in regard to the violation of this rule. The Chair hopes that members will respect the rule of the House, and if they desire to smoke will leave the floor for that purpose.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I ask by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the House now proceed to the consideration of bills under the new rule for one hour to-day.

Mr. BUDD. I have been seeking the floor for the purpose of making that motion in order that I might call up for consideration the San Francisco post-office bill.

Mr. WELLER. I object.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of submitting a privileged report, which I send up to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 9.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 13 and 15, and agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20 they have been unable to agree.

R. W. TOWNSHEND,
WM. S. HOLMAN,
R. G. HERR,

Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
WM. B. ALLISON,
JAS. B. BECK,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the statement accompanying the conference report under the rule of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the postal service for the fiscal year 1886 submit the following written statement in explanation of the conference report:

The conference committee have agreed upon only three amendments of the Senate, and the action recommended thereon fixes the amount for railroad transportation at $14,010,000; strikes out of the bill the provision to require bids from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for furnishing stamps, envelopes, and postal cards, and makes a verbal correction in the text of the bill.

The amendments disagreed upon relate to the rent of third-class post-offices, the question of foreign mail transportation, and the special stamp-delivery service.

R. W. TOWNSHEND,
WM. S. HOLMAN,
R. G. HERR,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, it will be seen from the reading of the report that the conferees on the part of the House and Senate have reached an agreement on all amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill except three. The first of those amendments is the one inserted by the Senate, extending the authority of the Postmaster-General to make contracts for lease of premises at the expense of the Government for third-class offices as well as first and second class offices. The second is the disagreement with that amendment of the Senate making appropriations for the ocean mail service. The third relates to the other sections of the bill, providing for the issuance of 10-cent special delivery stamps.

The conferees have declined to yield on the first of the amendments I have mentioned relating to leases for third-class offices for the reason we believe it opens the door to a much larger expenditure than at this time ought to be permitted. The number of post-offices in the United States reaches nearly 50,000. The number already where the Postmaster-General is authorized to make leases of buildings does not exceed four hundred, and they are of the first and second classes.

The number of offices of the third class amount to nearly 1,900, and by next year no doubt will reach 2,000. If this amendment is adopted, in my judgment it will render necessary we shall increase the appropriation necessary for leasing buildings for the purpose indicated nearly four times as much as is now provided for in the bill as it left the House. In other words it is believed, Mr. Speaker, by those who understood it properly, it will require an increase not less than $600,000, and may reach a million more than is provided by the amount named by the Senate.

It is claimed by those who advocate this extension of the power of the Postmaster-General for leasing buildings for post-offices of the third class that it is not proper that a postmaster who receives $1,900 salary should be deprived of the privilege of having a post-office leased at the expense of the Government for his use and be compelled to pay rent out of his salary for the premises occupied by him as a post-office, whereas a postmaster receiving $2,100 under the law is entitled to receive additional compensation for rent as well as fuel and light.

In answer I would say it makes no difference where you draw the line, there will be some apparent hardship. If the Postmaster-General is authorized to make leases for second and third class offices, then those occupying fourth-class offices will come to Congress and demand, inasmuch as they receive salaries less than postmasters of the third class, that the Postmaster-General should have the right to lease buildings for post-offices for them at the Government expense. It has been thought in the past to be wise the line should be drawn at $2,000 salaried offices.

Mr. COSGROVE rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman from Missouri not to interrupt me now. When I have concluded my statement I will be glad to yield to gentlemen who desire to ask me any questions.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, the House fairly to understand the character of the legislation they are entering upon, for if you adopt this amendment of the Senate you should increase the appropriation three or four times as much as you have provided in this bill, and include four or five times as many offices as are now furnished at the Government expense.

I warn you now if you allow this number of post-offices to be provided at the Government expense for third-class offices it will not be long until the occupants of fourth-class offices in the United States will be clamoring for the same privilege. Then, of course, you will have to make provision, as I have already indicated, for nearly 50,000 post-offices. I will not dwell further on that point, as I wish to be brief in the remarks I make on this report, being conscious of the short time left us for the consideration of the great money bills, of which this is the largest in amount.

The next and most vital point of difference between the two Houses is that relating to the ocean mail service. The ground upon which the majority of the House conferees have declined to accede to the amendment of the Senate is that the legislation proposed is in the nature of a subsidy.

I am aware that many good and wise members upon this floor and in the Senate deny that this is in the nature of a subsidy. There is a difference of opinion upon that point; but I think reflection will convince fair minds that it is so. It is insisted that in the exercise of a wise and sound discretion on the part of the Postmaster-General he will not go to the full limit of 50 cents per mile, which the proposition authorizes, unless the amount of service to be rendered will fairly justify him in doing so; that he will necessarily take into consideration in awarding contracts for such service the character and actual value thereof. But, Mr. Speaker, that question is to be left in the hands of some one who is entirely unknown to us at present. We do not know what may be his views on this question. We are groping in the dark in the adoption of such an amendment. We intrust to him an unwise and a dangerous power which will enable him to subsidize American lines if he shall be disposed to do so.

But, sir, we are met by the argument by gentlemen that as we have put the domestic mail service upon the basis of compensation for service rendered, and have intrusted to the Postmaster-General the discretionary power of making such contracts as he may in his judgment deem necessary for the interest of the public, that we could also with equal safety intrust to him the power to make contracts for mail service to foreign countries.

They insist that it requires no less ability and integrity for making contracts with the inland steamboat, the coastwise, and railway mail service than for making contracts to extend our foreign mail service on American vessels. One of the most forcible illustrations used for this argument was that of a gentleman, the other day, who asserted that if we can safely empower the Postmaster-General at his discretion to enter into contracts for the transportation of the mails from New York to Galveston upon an American steamer, we can with equal safety intrust to him the discretionary power of making contracts for the extension of that service across the Gulf of Mexico to Vera Cruz.

I admit that it is a very difficult question to answer, when gentlemen put the inquiry squarely: Why if you allow the Postmaster-General to exercise discretion in making contracts for the coastwise and inland steamboat service should there be any great apprehension of abuse of power in allowing him to exercise equal discretion in making contracts for conveying our mail to foreign countries? About the only answer I can make to that argument is that this amendment of the Senate is not of that nature exactly.

The proposition now under consideration raises the limit of the power of the Postmaster-General to contract, or rather puts it in his power to increase the compensation for mail service on American steamers to foreign countries from an aggregate of about $55,000 to an amount not exceeding $400,000. In other words, it repeals the present law fixing their pay at not exceeding the sea-going and inland postage for this service, and authorizes him to contract at a rate not exceeding 50 cents per mile.

It is contended, however, that the Government is paying some foreign lines of steamers carrying the mails from New York to Europe a higher rate per mile than that provided in this amendment—giving them more than 50 cents a mile. That is true in regard to one line—the North German Lloyd's; it was paid more than 50 cents per mile in 1883, and perhaps last year that line received nearly 70 cents per mile.

But gentlemen should remember that there is no comparison between the amount of mail carried on American mail steamers to the Southern and Pacific countries, to South America, Mexico, and Central America, to that carried on the North German Lloyd's line to Europe. Some gentlemen have not hesitated to advocate this proposition on the ground that even if there is a subsidy in this proposed increase of this ocean mail service it should be done for the encouragement and building up of the American merchant marine. They are willing to subsidize American steamers in order to secure for our flag a larger share of the commerce of the seas.

In answer to such suggestions, I want to say that I have full sympathy with every wise and just movement likely to increase our foreign commerce and the extension of our markets in the Southern and Pacific countries. It is well known that for more than a year I have been persistent in pressing upon the attention of Congress a proposition to form a commercial league of the nations on this continent, in character similar to the German Zollverein.

That scheme if carried into effect would far more effectually than subsidies rebuild and make prosperous our shipping interest, for it would provide that the maritime commerce between the United States and these countries should be carried on vessels owned by citizens of the countries embraced in the Zollverein. This would transfer to our flag nearly all the commerce among those countries which is carried on European vessels. If that proposition should be adopted there would be no possible need for subsidy.

If that is adopted the American merchant marine can not only successfully compete with the subsidized lines of Europe, but would enable us to rival if not outstrip any nation in the world in the commerce of the seas. For the purpose of showing the interest I have manifested in this subject before this amendment was offered, and to remove any impression that I am indifferent to the prosperity of our shipping interest, I will quote from my speech of January 10 last on the formation of an American customs union, as follows:

Perhaps there is no public question of paramount importance to that of rebuilding the American merchant marine and navy. I will not dwell here upon the causes which have produced the sad condition of our ocean commerce and the humiliating position of our flag on the seas. All recognize the insignificance of our shipping interest aside from our coastwise service. It has fallen from the proud position of rivalry with the greatest maritime powers under President Van Buren to the foot of the list under President Arthur. Then over 84 per cent. of our imports and exports were carried on American bottoms, now it has fallen to 15 per cent.

Twelve lines of steamers run to Europe from the Argentine Republic, but none to the United States.

It is stated in the daily press that last year only two American vessels sailed from New York to Europe, neither of which were steamers.

We are paying now over one hundred millions annually to foreign ships for carrying our commerce. Nothing can be done, in my judgment, which will more effectually and permanently rebuild our mercantile marine than the establishment of the American customs-unions.

One of the prime questions to be considered by members of the American customs-union would be the means of transit and intercourse, as between the United States and all those countries except Mexico the connection will be by water. Articles should be adopted by the Zollverein assembly which would apply the benefits of the freedom of commerce and exchange only to goods carried on vessels owned by the countries forming the union.

But by the establishment of an American Zollverein all countries outside of the Verein would be excluded from the benefits and privileges I have indicated. This would give us control of the carrying trade of this hemisphere. It would revive our languishing shipping interest, and lift it from the foot of the list to the highest degree. We would eventually dethrone England's sovereignty of the seas and become the great maritime power of the world. For the great increase which that trade would give to our shipping would enable our ship-owners to compete for a fair share of trade in all the seas. It would send our flag to ports where it is now a stranger, and transport American products under an American flag on American bottoms to the markets of the world.

But, sir, anxious as I am to accomplish that result, I am opposed to subsidies. The plan I have suggested can not, however, obtain favorable action during this session.

Now we must return to the point practically before us: What is the compensation paid? As is well known, the law to-day provides that the Postmaster-General may compensate our foreign ships by paying them 2 cents as sea-going postage upon each letter carried.

The law does permit the Postmaster-General to pay the American steamers engaged in the carrying our foreign mails both the inland and the sea-going postage. The officials of that Department have not, as I understand, however, ever exercised that power; and the reason assigned by them is that the appropriations made by Congress will only permit them to pay American steamers the same amount as is paid to European steamers, or 2 cents per letter. What is the result? By referring to the report of the Postmaster-General of last year you will find there is some truth in the statement that some of the American lines running to the southern countries are inadequately compensated. And the same report shows us there is an extravagant allowance for carrying of our mails by some foreign lines to European countries.

There are two classes of vessels engaged in carrying our foreign mails. One is a class owned by Europeans almost exclusively engaged in carrying the mails from our Eastern ports to European ports. No American steamer crosses the Atlantic with an American mail upon it. The other class are vessels built in America and owned by citizens of the United States. American steamers are almost exclusively engaged in transporting our mails to Mexico, Central and South America, the West Indies, China and Japan, Australia, and the Sandwich Islands.

The North German Lloyd's, a foreign line from New York to Bremen, received last year an average of over $1,600 a trip for carrying the mail; whereas on American lines running to the southern and Pacific countries the compensation ran as low as $30 a trip. The lines from San Francisco to Japan and China received on an average about $125 a trip. The line running from New York to Aspinwall received about $131 per average trip. The vessels from San Francisco to China, travel a distance of about 7,000 miles, while from New York to Bremen the distance is only some 3,000 miles. From this it will be seen as claimed by the advocates of this amendment that the American line to China received only about one-thirteenth as much as the foreign line to Bremen, although it carried our mails over twice as far.

Now, why is this? It is because the basis upon which you make the compensation for the carrying of foreign mails is uniformly 2 cents per letter, and produces that result. I do not believe the basis is right. For whereas 2 cents as a basis does give to the European lines an excessive and extravagant compensation, the basis of 2 cents for these lines running south and southwest furnishes in most instances inadequate compensation. But so long as this basis stands this unequal and unfair result will follow.

As I have heretofore said, the immense amount of mails carried to European ports results in giving the large compensation to the lines to Europe which I have mentioned, while the smallness of the quantity of mail carried to southern ports results in the small pay received for carrying those mails under the present law. This basis allows no more pay for carrying a letter 3,000 miles than for carrying it 7,000 miles. This is wrong. In all our domestic service we take into consideration the distance, weight, and character of service performed in fixing mail-pay, and should do so in our foreign service.

My colleagues on the committee and myself have seen the inequality and injustice of this basis of compensation and have endeavored to find the way by which a just and fair basis can be established. My friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and myself earnestly desire to find some plan whereby honest, just, and fair compensation may be made for the amount of service rendered by American steamers. While I admit that we ought to take into consideration the distance carried, we should also take into consideration the weight of the mails and the amount of service the vessels perform for the Government.

My colleague on the committee, Judge HOLMAN, suggests as some remedy for the injustice of this basis to American vessels that we direct the Postmaster-General to pay the American steamers both the inland and foreign postage; but, sir, we find great difficulty in formulating a plan which will do justice both to the Government and the carrier.

I am opposed to subsidies as undemocratic and unrepugnant, as unsound governmental policy. I shall not vote for a subsidy for any purpose. I am told that England has built her up her merchant marine by means of subsidies in the nature of large mail-pay. Her main object, however, has been to keep open her communications with her colonies. I am told also that as soon as the Canadian-Pacific road is built she intends to subsidize a line running from Victoria to China and Japan, which will compete with the American line running from San Francisco. And we are told that she has now ships running from San Francisco to Australia, and that she is running a subsidized mail line to Brazil.

We are told that France has subsidized not only her foreign mail lines but also the commerce of her merchant marine by allowing 30 cents per ton for every mile of steam navigation by vessels built in her ship-yards carrying her flag, and 15 per cent. in addition thereto when the designs for the ships are submitted to and approved by the Navy Department. We are told the Brazilian Government subsidizes not only its own mail lines but English lines to the extent of over $1,000,000 per annum, and that it has even subsidized one of the American lines to the extent of $100,000 per annum.

But, sir, our institutions, our policy, and principles of government are antagonistic to the policies and the principles adopted and necessary in monarchies, which are founded largely on the idea of privileges to the few, and which lead to the building up of strong monopolies. I do not believe it wise that we should adopt such a policy. If we do not grant subsidies as inducements for carrying our mail in American steamers, what system should we adopt?

There is another plan suggested. It is that we shall empower the Postmaster-General to exercise the same discretion in compensating for our foreign mail service that he does in fixing compensation for our domestic mail service; that we shall give him power to make contracts for the service rendered on similar terms of our coastwise and inland service. That is a suggestion which, in my judgment, appeals much more forcibly to the sense of justice of those who wish to do their duty to the Government and the carriers of our mails on the ocean than does the idea of granting subsidies; but when you come to the consideration of this suggestion you find that as construed the statute limits the power of the Postmaster-General to making contracts for carrying the mails only to the extent of 2 cents and 5 cents per letter.

No such proposition, however, is before the House, and it is unnecessary for me to discuss it unless it is offered; but before I take my seat I want to call attention to another question regarding our foreign mail service. The Postmaster-General, in his report, and the superintendent of the foreign mail service both dwell with emphasis upon the act of last session repealing what is known as the compulsory law. The compulsory law that was in force until the last session of this Congress put it in the power of the Postmaster-General to force American steamers to carry our mails for the sea-going postage. He had the power to coerce them and he did coerce them at times when they insisted the compensation was inadequate.

It was claimed by the American steamship companies that this power of the Postmaster-General was exerted to an extent which caused actual loss upon some of the lines. I see that the report of the commission sent lately to Central and South America, just published, states that some of the lines to Central and South America and the West Indies have actually suffered loss on the mails they have handled. If this is true, no fair-minded person would deny that their compensation should be increased. I believe that is true of some of the lines, but not of all. The compensation for the line running to Brazil is perhaps sufficient; it gets over $800 per trip.

The Postmaster-General and the superintendent of the foreign mail service warn us if no change is made in the law as it stands, and those steamers refuse to carry the mails, serious interruption will be produced in our commercial relations and correspondence with those countries. The superintendent of the foreign mail service states that threats have been already made that the mails will be thrown off some of the lines running from San Francisco.

But, on the other hand, it is insisted that those lines will never throw off the mails, that the carriage of the mails is almost a necessity to them in the conduct of their business, that they can not well conduct their general business unless they carry the mails which enable the merchants of the countries between which they ply to communicate easily with each other, and that therefore no such danger will arise as the Postmaster-General and the superintendent of the foreign mail service seem to anticipate.

But, be that as it may, we ought not to force any body or company to perform service for the Government without just and fair compensation for the service performed. Let me say again that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], as well as myself, desires that something shall be done which will give these steamship lines fair, just, honest compensation for carrying our mails on the ocean. We do not desire to force the carriage of the mails at a loss. I wish to give full compensation for the amount of service performed; but I think this empowers the Postmaster-General in many instances to go beyond what may be properly regarded as reasonable and fair compensation for the service. In the absence of an agreement for a satisfactory plan we reported to the general committee the bill with provision for payment on the basis of the sea-going postage. And that action has been sustained by the House on a vote taken by yeas and nays.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], as I have stated, at one time suggested that we might direct the Postmaster-General to give the American lines both the inland and the sea-going postage. I would be willing to accept such a proposition. If that were done, it would more than double the amount of their compensation. They are receiving now about $55,000 for carrying the American mails, and that proposition would give them over $130,000, nearly $140,000.

I know that when gentlemen here call attention to the inequality between the compensation of American steamers and that received by foreign steamers for mail service they bring to bear an argument which works upon the sympathies of many gentlemen in this House who would feel a pride in building up the merchant marine of this country. The figures do show, as they have asserted, that last year foreign steamers received $273,000 for carrying our mails to Europe, whereas the American ships received only about $55,000.

If the proposition I mentioned a moment ago be adopted the American steamers would receive somewhere in the neighborhood of $130,000 or $140,000. If they were given the sea-going and the inland postage, it would be a step in the direction of giving them fair and just compensation—much fairer than they receive under the present law. But unless something of that kind be done the House conferees, in order to be consistent with their principles and to obey the vote which has been taken upon a proposition substantially the same as this, must stand upon the position they have heretofore taken. We went into conference, backed by a vote of some 15 or 20 majority, refusing to accept a proposition similar to the one that the Senate has placed upon this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored dispassionately, calmly, impartially to put before the House the arguments used on both sides of this question in order that the situation may be fully understood. Unless this House reverses the action it has heretofore taken by a pronounced vote I shall, if I go back into conference, stand in opposition to the amendment of the Senate. At the same time, if some proposition giving American steamers fair and just compensation for the amount of service performed can be agreed upon I should be glad to see it done, in order that the Government may be relieved from the dilemma that the Post-Office officials and others think it will be in after April next when the compulsory law will cease to operate. I wish to avoid any danger of interruption of our correspondence or commerce with foreign countries.

It is said that these lines, if the Department fails to make contracts with them, will at once advertise that they are willing to carry letters for merchants and other correspondents, and will fix such scale of charges as they may determine. If that were done it would still be a very inconvenient mode of conducting correspondence with foreign countries, because no matter what amount of stamps may be put upon a letter destined, for instance, for China, it is necessary when it reaches San Francisco that there shall be some authority there to negotiate with the vessel and the Department for carrying the mail.

In such a condition the public would be left entirely in the power of the steamship companies, who might tax them unjustly and onerously for the service. But I am opposed to this amendment because it partakes of the nature of a subsidy; and I shall stand in opposition to it until this House shall otherwise direct.

Now, in regard to the last point of difference, the 10-cent specialty stamp. The proposition on that subject was put on this bill by a unanimous vote of the Appropriations Committee and by a unanimous vote of the House. The Senate has stricken it out upon the theory that it is general legislation. I find the construction of the Senate in that regard is this: Whenever any general legislation suits their views they have no hesitation in putting it upon an appropriation bill, as they did in regard to authorizing the Postmaster-General to lease premises for third-class offices; but when the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, or the Senate itself, do not desire general legislation they fall back upon the technical rule and claim that they are not permitted under their rules to place general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

I do not desire to discuss this question further. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-five minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I propose to yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. Before surrendering the floor I will make a motion to adopt the report. But I do not wish to cut off debate by other gentlemen. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] desire to go on now?

Mr. HERR. I prefer to wait until I move to concur in the amendment as to mail transportation on American vessels. The first vote should be taken at once on adopting the report.

The SPEAKER. Does the committee of conference report a disagreement as to this amendment?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. As to three amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is this one of them?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am now moving to adopt the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inquiring whether this is one of the amendments upon which the committee of conference has disagreed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is.

The SPEAKER. Then it can not be disposed of until the report has been either agreed to or disagreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My motion is to adopt the report. I am not desirous, however, of cutting off debate on it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to inquire whether if the conference report be first adopted we shall have debate distinctly upon this point?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not state what debate will be allowed, because that is a matter which rests with the House. If the previous question should not be ordered, there will be debate as a matter of course.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If it is not the desire to debate the motion, I will move the previous question.

Mr. BINGHAM. But we do desire to debate it.

Mr. HERR. And we do not wish to be cut off.

Mr. BINGHAM. We want our hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated that as soon as the House has disposed of the report of the conference committee, the amendments about which the committee disagree will then come up for consideration.

Mr. HERR. I will take the floor now, because I do not wish any question to arise afterward.

The SPEAKER. There can be no question as to the right of the House to consider each one of the amendments after the report has been agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, it will be just as well to have the debate before the conference report is adopted as afterward.

The SPEAKER. That can be done, although it is not the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it will be granted.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection that course will be pursued.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 341) to authorize the printing of 50,000 copies of the second annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the year 1885; when the Speaker signed the same.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 2, 1885.

HON. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker House Representatives, Forty-eighth Congress, U. S. A.:

I have the honor to inform you that I have resigned the office of Representative in the Forty-eighth Congress from the fourth Congressional district of Alabama, from and after the hour of 12 m. of this the 3d day of March, 1885, and that said resignation has been forwarded to the governor of the State of Alabama, at Montgomery, Ala.

Most respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE H. CRAIG.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve my time.

Mr. HERR. Mr. Speaker, the amendment ingrafted upon this bill by the Senate in reference to the carrying of our foreign mails upon American steamships is the only one which I propose now to call the attention of the House to, and in doing so I wish to say that I hope the House in the end will agree in that Senate amendment, because I am satisfied it is a wise provision and one that ought to be adopted by the American Congress.

This bill as the Senate have amended it carries $400,000 for the purpose of paying for carrying our foreign mails in American ships; and let me read the provision to show you how wisely it is drawn:

For transportation of foreign mails, including railway transit across the Isthmus of Panama, $800,000. And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the transportation of any part of said foreign mails, after legal advertisement, with the lowest responsible bidder, at a rate not exceeding 50 cents a nautical mile on the trip each way actually traveled between the terminal points: Provided, That the mails so contracted shall be carried on American steamships, and that the aggregate of such contracts shall not exceed one-half of the sum hereby appropriated.

Mr. Speaker, this $400,000 covers the carriage of the mails in round numbers 1,750,000 miles. Understand me, the whole distance aggregates 1,750,000 miles that these vessels will travel for this $400,000.

How came we to be in the condition we are now in? I wish every member would give me his attention on this point. Formerly these ships received 40 cents a letter for over one-half of the ports to which they carried our letters; 25 cents a letter to China and Japan, and 30 cents a letter from the United States to Australia. September 15, 1874, a conference of nations met at Berne. There were twenty-one nations represented. They adjourned, and in 1875 reassembled at Paris, and there entered into an arrangement whereby this postage was cut down, and instead of being 25, 30, and 40 cents a letter, after that conference we have paid 2 and 3 cents only a letter.

Immediately after that conference every other nation of any dignity or magnitude on the face of the earth except ours gave extra compensation to their ships for carrying these mails. We cut down the price—

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, in the chair). Gentlemen will suspend conversation upon the floor. Public business will be suspended until order is restored.

Mr. HERR. I was just about saying, Mr. Speaker, that international postal convention cut down the price, and while the American Government refused aid to her ships, England paid last year for this service over $3,000,000. She has paid as high as $6,000,000. She paid for her route to Japan and China alone last year $1,800,000. England paid out last year for her ships to the West Indies $400,000. The United States, this nation which we all feel so proud of, paid the magnificent sum of $3,600, and compelled American vessels to carry the mails for that mere pittance, which the officers of the vessels swear did not cover the expense of transporting the mails on shore and getting them aboard from the post-offices, to say nothing about carrying them. We paid last year for carrying our entire foreign mails $325,000. Italy paid $2,000,000. The Republic of France paid about $4,500,000, and England, as I have already stated, $3,000,000. You must remember that our American vessels are compelled to compete with ships receiving these large sums for the carrying trade of the world.

Now, mark this: We collected one million and a quarter of dollars last year out of foreign mails more than we paid for their carriage. Let me show the House what we are doing to-day, because I wish to reach this question of subsidy, which is such a bugbear in the minds of so many members here.

Formerly, as I have said, the ships received 40, 30, and 25 cents for carrying each letter. We cut the prices of a letter down from here to Australia, which is 6,000 miles, and compelled them to carry it that distance for 3 cents, precisely the same amount that they got for carrying a letter from Boston to Halifax, 578 miles. We compelled them to carry the mail to New Zealand, 5,000 miles, for the same price per letter we paid from New York to Havana, 1,280 nautical miles. We compelled them to accept pay for the long haul just as they got for the short haul. [Laughter.] My friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is not here; that was for his benefit.

Now, gentlemen, what is this proposition? My friend from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] stated it correctly. It is simply to permit the Postmaster-General to let a contract for carrying the mails 6,000 miles and pay for it what the service is worth; just as you do from New York to Havana, 1,280 miles. We adopt this principle all over the United States on land; we do not pretend to carry letters just where they will pay by their postage for their carriage, do we? We carry the letters to points in the West or the South where every letter cost from one to five dollars a letter to deliver it, and we charge 2 cents for that letter and no more. We run our mails on land on the theory that we should deliver all the letters for our entire people at a cheap rate of postage; and by this amendment which the Senate adds to the bill it is intended to adopt in a small way that same principle and apply it to ocean postage. Now I did want to state these facts to the House, but it seems that they are not inclined to allow me to do it. I can not talk while everybody else is talking.

Mr. REAGAN. Permit me just here to congratulate my friend from Michigan on having at last got right on the question of long and short hauls.

Mr. HERR. When you apply it to the mails I am with you, because it is right. Indeed, Judge, I am always apt to be right; that is a peculiarity of mine. [Great laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. No doubt right sometimes and wrong sometimes on such questions; but the gentleman thinks he is always right.

Mr. HERR. I should dislike to act, when I thought I was wrong, on any question. I am not very particular, Mr. Speaker, as I said, about whether I give the House the facts that I have prepared, or not. [Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. RANDALL. If there is no desire to debate further, perhaps we can have the previous question.

Mr. HERR. We are met right on the threshold of this attempt with the acknowledgment on the part of the gentleman from Illinois that this compensation ought to be allowed, and with the admission on the part of the bulk of the House that these ships are getting now nothing in the shape of adequate compensation for the work they do. But the moment the question is started they all begin to cry out "subsidy!"

My friend from Pennsylvania here [Mr. BAYNE] closed this debate in this House a few days ago by a pious, moral lecture to the Democrats in reference to subsidies, and I never heard a man whose bowels yearned so wonderfully over anything as his did over the good that he was disposed to hope for from the Democratic party in this House while warning them of their danger. It was cheering. He went into the whole length and breadth of this subsidy question. He appealed to them not to be entrapped into a subsidy thus early in their accession to power.

Now, in all kindness to my friend from Pennsylvania, I want to call his attention to a fact, and I do so for his speech was a good one. It lacks simply one element so far as I can learn, which was this: It did not state correctly a single fact; that is all. What he stated for facts were every one of them untrue; and that, I say, was the only element that was lacking to make it complete. The next day after he did the mischief he admitted himself on the floor of the House, in that honest way he always has, that when he stated to the House that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had made dividends of 20 per cent. a year, that he had made a slight mistake in his figures, and that it should have been 5 per cent. instead of 20.

Mr. BURLEIGH. And that for only one year out of fourteen.

Mr. HERR. I have looked it up, and I call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to it. For the last year the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has paid three dividends of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per quarter. That is at the rate of 5 per cent. per year, isn't it? You New York men are all right on percents, and can tell me. Now, what is the result? I say to my friend from Pennsylvania that those are the only dividends they have paid in fourteen years. What have they done in fourteen long years? I will tell you: They have been to your State of Pennsylvania and they have put \$9,000,000 into iron ships, building nineteen ironclads in the yards of your State, ranging from 2,500 registered tonnage to 5,000 registered tonnage; built nineteen as good ships as float in the merchant marine of the world, paid your manufacturers for them, you have got your money, and now the gentleman is afraid these ships will get a little something for their work. [Laughter.]

If there is anything a Pennsylvanian is boss at it is in always appreciating every kind of tax that comes into Pennsylvania's pocket. [Laughter.] I never knew one of them go back on his own State; and I like them for that. All they want is to broaden themselves out a little and do for this whole country what they never fail to advise for their State.

I have been in favor of the tariff on iron and things that have gone into those ships. I believe in it. You gentlemen of the Democratic party do not. But my friend General BAYNE and I agree upon that. Now, why should we compel them to build these ships in your yards and then deny them the right of fair compensation for carrying our mails?

"Oh, but," says my friend General BAYNE, "why Gould—yes, Gould owns some of this stock in that company." Supposing he does. Would the gentleman have the mails carried in American vessels owned by people who have not got anything? [Laughter.] That is what he intimates. How can you do that? He would have a big American marine built up by people who have not anything to build it with.

But, stop! I did not hear the gentleman make any vigorous speech against carrying the mails over the Union Pacific Railroad. We pay that railroad according to mileage just as I want to pay the ships. The gentleman's voice was silent as to that. But Gould owns, too, an immense extent in the Union Pacific, while Gould, Huntington, and the whole list the gentleman spoke of have not 5,000 shares to-day in the Pacific Mail Steamship Company out of the 200,000 shares. Who is it, Mr. Speaker, that owns the stock of this Pacific Mail Steamship Company?

Mr. KING. May I ask the gentleman from Michigan a question?

Mr. HERR. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I ask the gentleman if his proposition is to pay for the mails on steamships the same as for the mails on railroads?

Mr. HERR. This proposition is to let the Postmaster-General contract by the mile, just as we do with our coastwise vessels, just as we do with our railroad service, just as we do in the star-route service, provided he shall not give over 50 cents a mile; and he is to let it to the lowest bidder. As regards all other mail transactions we let the elements of weight and distance come in—do we not? Why, sir, on the star routes, if you should adopt this plan that you have adopted as to these American vessels, there would not be a letter carried through the West and South of this nation. There is not a Southern State, if I remember, that to-day collects postage enough to pay its share of the service. Suppose it does not, our theory is to deliver these mails to the people all over our country; and I would extend the principle and deliver them to every nation in the world at this low rate; but I would not take the money out of the poor American ships to pay the service with. I would pay it just as we do our railroad and star routes. Now another thing—

Mr. HUTCHINS. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me for a question?

Mr. HERR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUTCHINS. What rate is paid the coastwise steamers?

Mr. HERR. The coastwise steamers now get, as I recollect, about 67 cents a mile on an average.

A MEMBER. Fifty cents a mile.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Why should there be that difference?

Mr. HERR. There should be no difference, except that coastwise steamers may carry a little more in weight than the vessels that go on those long routes.

Mr. ELLIS. But are they not protected against competition?

Mr. HERR. The American ships for which we are providing take a mail-bag and are gone twenty-six days with it. You compel them to receive for that work, for carrying a letter twenty-six days, just the same as they get for a day's travel from Key West across to Cuba.

Now what I want is simply this, that we should let the Postmaster-General pay these American vessels something near what they actually earn. It is fair; it is honest. They should be paid for the distance they haul our mails.

But I started to refer to what my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] said, that of the amount proposed to be appropriated by the bill, when it embraced the sum of $600,000, the Pacific Mail Company would get $320,000. Where did the gentleman get at that fact? I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say where he got it.

Mr. BAYNE. That is ascertained by the number of miles traveled by that line.

Mr. HERR. The gentleman's mathematics are wrong.

Mr. BAYNE. Then the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] is wrong. I took that statement from the speech of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HERR. That is generally very good authority.

Mr. BAYNE. I find it stated in his speech that there were 634,000 miles run last year by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Mr. HERR. I find this to be the fact with reference to this amount of $400,000. If in a bidding the Pacific Mail Steamship Company should get the maximum amount, that is, simply get paid for the routes where there is no competition, at the maximum rate, it would get $46,000. If it gets the entire routes on which the line ran last year at the maximum price, it would get only $130,000.

I wish to say to the members of this House, after careful study of this question, that I believe the Senate has done a fair thing on this foreign carrying business. Can not we all of us rise to the dignity of doing a little something for American shipping? Can not we all of us consult and agree that right here and now at the close of this Congress we will commence a system of paying fair rates to the vessels that carry the American flag?

Why, gentlemen, this Pacific Mail Steamship Company that we hear so much about is owned by seven hundred different American citizens; it is almost all owned in this country. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me close by repeating what I have already said—that I hope we shall do justice to these vessels that carry the American flag; I do not care who owns them. This Pacific Mail Company that gentlemen talk about so much is the company that has carried our flag over one-third of the globe where it would not have been seen at any time within the last ten years but for that company's work. Should we be stampeded here because that steamship company gets a little pay? It has carried our mails for almost nothing for nine years—for less than enough compensation to pay the cartage at each end of its route. We have repealed that law. After the 1st of April next we can no longer compel these steamship lines to carry our mails for nothing. Now, this amendment of the Senate proposes that your Postmaster-General shall have the right to make contracts to pay these vessels what they really earn.

I appeal to this House, now approaching its close, to do this much for the American people and for American enterprise. I know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] and all of you bandy the word "subsidy." That is a ghost that has no terrors for me. I would vote for this proposition if it was $800,000, and I would do it from a sense of fairness. Why, sir, we made a million and a quarter dollars out of this service, taken as a whole, last year. Why then should we not let American ships that carry the American flag get pay for their work, when that entire service earns the money? I do believe that upon reflection this House will do justice to American shipping and give it at least what we give to foreign vessels for this mail service—because that is the Senate amendment. It divides the compensation evenly between the two. When we come to this vote I expect men who are always voting here to help England and against this country to vote against this amendment; but the men who believe in American commerce, in American shipping, in American prosperity, and in the American flag, ought to sustain this amendment, and so help to set our flag afloat once more upon the face of the ocean. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] has thirty minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Michigan to yield to me for a moment to correct a misapprehension.

Mr. HERR. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. DINGLEY. In reference to the figures of the mileage of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, I wish to state that the discrepancy between the figures presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] and those presented by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] arises from the difference in the provisions of the two amendments. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] spoke on this subject we had under consideration the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations which included American steamship lines running between the Atlantic and Pacific ports, and included only about one-half of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's mileage; but this amendment as it comes from the committee confines the provision to the lines running to foreign ports, and they cover only the figures stated by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR]. So that both sets of figures are correct.

Mr. BRUMM. But the figures of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] do not apply to this bill, and the figures of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] do.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great attention to the progress of this discussion, both when the bill was before the House previous to its passage and since it returned from the committee of conference. I have never for one moment doubted that it was and is the clear interest of this country and the clear duty of Congress to enable the Postmaster-General to make these contracts (originally proposed by this House, and now proposed in this Senate amendment in modified form) for the progress of the commerce and of every interest in this country. Sir, it is by the carrying of our mails and the carrying of our flag into the other nations of the earth and among them—the nations with which we are to build up our trade—that the hope of progress in the trade and commerce of this nation exists. It is by this more than in any other way that even the agriculturists and the producers of this country in every department of industrial activity are to be benefited and blest.

Let not those men who dwell upon the prairies, let not those men who participate in the magnificent and widely extended and growing interests of agriculture, fancy that ill is to come to them by opening the markets of the world, by carrying the American flag and sustaining it in every country and into every field of commerce and to every place where the products of their farms or the manufactures of our country (which are but the secondary and condensed products of their farms) are in demand. Sir, we can do nothing more important than to see to it that from this time forward there shall not be, on this continent at least, a nation or a port or a field of commerce where our flag is not seen, where it is not sustained, and sustained, I hope, upon American bottoms.

Now, sir, this is not a subsidy; it is not a proposition to bestow benefits upon a mail steamship company or upon any company. It is a proposition to take the initiative in advancing the commerce and the intercourse of this great nation of ours with the welfare and progress of which at this moment this American Congress is charged—it is that and nothing else. Are we to say that because this power may make it profitable for American citizens and American bottoms to carry the flag of our country and to maintain postal communication with the other nations of this continent, therefore we will not give the necessary authority? Why, sir, I hope these profits will be such that there will not be a port upon the continent, there will not be a field of commerce to which we can send our products where our flag will not go and our postal communications extend; and then as a necessary and an inevitable result the commerce of this country will spring up and we shall be repaid ten-thousand-fold. I hope, sir, that we shall concur without hesitation in this amendment of the Senate; and I only regret that it does not place a larger amount at the discretion of the Postmaster-General for the purposes of the amendment.

But, sir, this amendment is enough to start with; and I have no doubt that succeeding Congresses, with the approval and support of the united American people, will carry forward this policy until we shall have achieved what is our right and our duty—the possession and control of the markets and commerce of this continent, under our flag, for us and our children increasingly henceforth.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERR. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have twenty-five minutes left. I would like to reserve that time until I hear from the opponents of the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH, of Missouri). The gentleman has twenty-two minutes.

Mr. HERR. Well, I reserve that time.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan found fault with what I said the other day on the ground that in my remarks I did not correctly state the facts. One error into which he was led, because he had not taken into consideration the separate provision which was under consideration when we were discussing this matter before, has been rectified by the statement of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. Under the provision of this bill as it came from the Committee on Appropriations of the House, the Government was quite likely to pay to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company $312,000; and it was inevitable that the Government should pay to that company about $130,000, because the company has no competitor, no rival for the service over about 280,000 miles. Under the amendment adopted by the Senate, the amount which would be received by this steamship company from the Government is very considerably diminished. If the company gets the full 50 cents a mile, the amount in round numbers would be $150,000; because it traveled last year about 300,000 miles outside of what is cut off by the Senate amendment, as shown by the statement published in the speech of my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. That matter is therefore out of the way. A matter in which I was mistaken on that occasion was that the steamship company had declared a dividend of 20 per cent. I corrected myself on the floor that very day; I did not postpone the correction until the next day.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the gentleman did not make the correction until after the vote.

Mr. BAYNE. I did not; but if I had known of the error before the vote, I should have corrected myself at once.

I do not regard that, however, as a very influential factor in this matter. I do not consider it a proper question for the House to consider whether this company is paying big dividends or little dividends.

I have never learned that it is a part of the duty of Congress to help a corporation out because it is paying little dividends or to withdraw from a corporation just compensation for services rendered because it is paying big dividends; and therein the gentleman and I differ, and differ very widely, respecting this proposition.

Mr. HERR. Why, then, did the gentleman make use of that statement as an argument?

Mr. BAYNE. I did not propose to use it as an argument at all. The gentleman asked me what the capital stock was, with a view perhaps of showing that the company did not pay big dividends. I replied to him as best I could and according to the best information I had at the moment. I did not intend to use that statement as an argument, because I regard it as ultra vires, without any logical connection with the fair argument of this case, without any connection with the policy which should control in the legislation of this Government.

Whether a corporation pays a big dividend or a little dividend or no dividend is not a question that should decide the votes of members of Congress in making contracts on the part of the Government. We are not here to relieve insolvent or weak corporations; we are not here to give stocks in Wall street a "boom." That is none of our business here; at least it is not mine. And it is not my business here, although I am from Pennsylvania, to vote subsidies to corporations because they buy their iron in Pennsylvania. I hope I am influenced by larger motives than that. I should regard it as a bribe if I undertook to be governed by considerations of that kind in my public and official capacity here.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Every time you vote for a tariff you are recognizing such considerations.

Mr. BAYNE. Therein the gentleman grievously errs. Tariff and subsidy have no more connection than the antipodes. They are not at all alike in principle. They have no connection. One thing that I strenuously object to is that you adopt an odious policy and undertake to assimilate it with protection. The policy of protection in this country stands on its own feet.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Then why should you not protect the steamships?

Mr. BAYNE. Wait a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] must not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. BAYNE. One of the propositions I was anxious about was to save the tariff from the odium of subsidies. I regard the tariff for protection as identically the same thing applied to a nation which the law of every nation applies to every citizen, namely, that the citizen of the State is protected by the law in the enjoyment of property he may accumulate. The tariff law is nothing more than applying that same principle to this national family of ours. It is to protect our own people in the enjoyment of the property which they accumulate; and the relation of this nation to the other nations of the world is precisely analogous to that relation which exists between one family and another in our own social organism, or in the framework of our own ordinary society.

But when you levy taxes upon the people and get those taxes into the Treasury of the United States and pay them out in the shape of subsidies, you depart widely from the proposition that the American people should be protected as families are protected by the laws of society and by the laws of the land in the accumulation of the property each family may have.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYNE. I yield for a question to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Does not the law and did not the law compel the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to buy American-built ships, or not?

Mr. BAYNE. I believe it did.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Very well; then if that is the fact were they not compelled to pay at least $2,000,000 out of their $9,000,000 in extra cost to the people of the State of Pennsylvania?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not think they were required to pay to the people of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. No other iron ships—

Mr. BAYNE. My friend has asked me a question, and he will let me answer.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. And, moreover, I do not think they were required to pay it to the people of Pennsylvania—

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Where were they to go?

Mr. BAYNE. My friend must permit me to answer. I can not submit to that sort of interrogation. I say that they were not required to pay it to the people of Pennsylvania, because if we had no manufacturing industries in this country they would have to pay equal prices to Europe.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Why?

Mr. BAYNE. One moment. I will not yield if you do not let me answer without constant interruption.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Very well.

Mr. BAYNE. Let me say to you if it had not been for the doctrine of protection there would have been no commerce in this country for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to make it worth while that they should continue running their ships.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Where is it?

Mr. BAYNE. This company is paying a dividend of 5 per cent. quarterly, which makes a handsome showing. And while I am on that point I will call attention to some data which I have gathered from the Commercial Chronicle, as I have not had access to the reports of that company. I find in 1881-'82 the gross earnings of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company were $4,124,713; in 1882-'83, $4,103,764; in 1883-'84, $4,787,899. The expenses for the year first named were $2,223,036; for the second, $3,190,507; for the third, $3,394,419. The net earnings were $901,677 for the first, $912,257 for the second, and $1,393,480 for the third.

Mr. HERR. On a capital stock—

Mr. BAYNE. On a capital stock of $20,000,000.

Mr. HERR. All paid in.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not know. I understand that the misfortune of the company is that which has attended many other great corporations in this country, that it owes a large debt. It is paying 7 per cent. interest on a part of that debt, and it absorbs the profits of that corporation to pay the interest on that debt. I do not know how the business has been managed, what losses have been incurred; but if organized on the same principle and upon the same plan that many railroad corporations in this country have been, then the outfit has cost a great deal more money than the actual worth of the plant.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Did the Pennsylvania Steamship Company do any better?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not know.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Did it not break—were they not sold out?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not know whether they did or not, nor do I care. Nor can I declare whether this is a poor company or not, whether Mr. Jay Gould and Russell Sage and Sidney Dillon and the others have become poor or not. It is not the duty or purpose of Congress to relieve them from their embarrassments if that is so.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. No one asks it.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not propose by any vote of mine to relieve those gentlemen from the misfortunes which may happen to come upon their business.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUTCHINS. The gentleman has given a statement of the gross earnings of this Pacific Steamship Company. Now will the gentleman be so kind as to state the proportion of these gross earnings which have gone into the Treasury of that steamship company in consequence of the reciprocity treaty with the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not know.

Mr. HUTCHINS. You should know, then, before you speak about it. The reciprocity with the Hawaiian Islands has done it.

Mr. BAYNE. I have not studied that matter up. It is altogether unnecessary for gentlemen to study up those questions.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Now I want the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he will state it, to give an answer to this question. I want to know what he means by saying that they are "paying interest on a debt." I want him to be perfectly fair and say whether he intends to convey the idea that this company is in debt.

Mr. BAYNE. I mean to say—

Mr. HUTCHINS. I ask the gentleman the question plainly, if he means to say and reiterate to the House the statement that this company is in debt?

Mr. BAYNE. I did not say that.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Yes, you did. You said that owing to the percentage of interest paid on their debt—7 per cent.—they could not pay dividends.

Mr. BAYNE. I will tell the gentleman what I said: The statement that I made was obtained from a report in the Congressional Library, which the gentleman can see for himself if he chooses to look at it, taken from the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, a statement to the effect that this company was in debt and paying 7 per cent. interest on a large indebtedness, which absorbs, according to the statement, about $240,000 per annum.

Mr. HUTCHINS. But the gentleman—

Mr. BAYNE. Now I must decline to yield to the gentleman. I refer him to that statement. I saw that only a few minutes ago in the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, which I have understood to be good authority. It is said to be a reputable, reliable paper in commercial transactions; and the gentleman can find it in the Congressional Library if he chooses to look for it.

Mr. HUTCHINS. And I want to deny as a matter of fact that the company is in debt. I do not want the inference to be drawn from the statement of the gentleman that there is any such indebtedness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield for a moment the Chair desires to lay before the House an executive communication.

Mr. BAYNE. Very well.

ALLEGED FRAUDS IN OFFICIAL ENVELOPES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a schedule of papers accompanying letters from the Postmaster-General, addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, under date of February 26, 1885, in regard to the annulment of certain contracts for furnishing post-office envelopes; which were ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House but a short time—

Mr. HERR. Before the gentleman closes I would be glad to have him answer this point concisely: Why should these companies not get a fair pay for their work? Why should they not be paid all that they earn for the service?

Mr. TILLMAN. Whether they be rich or poor.

Mr. HERR. Yes, no matter what their financial condition may be.

Mr. BAYNE. That is just what I have said. It is identically my own proposition to give them fair pay for the service they actually render, and to give them this compensation whether they be rich and free from debt, or whether they be poor with heavy obligations; whether they pay dividends or do not pay dividends makes no difference whatever to me in determining that question. The fact that Jay Gould and those men associated with him are rich and own the corporation makes no difference to me in the question of paying this corporation a fair compensation for the service it may render to the Government.

Mr. BRUMM. Then why do you oppose this Senate provision?

Mr. BAYNE. I am willing to go further in this direction even than that. I am willing to pay, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois in charge of this bill, the entire postal receipts of this Government from its foreign mail service to these companies of ship-owners for carrying the foreign mails.

Mr. DINGLEY. That would amount to about $1,700,000 per annum.

Mr. BAYNE. And I am willing to pay every dollar of it if you subject it to the condition that as to letting it out the lowest responsible bid shall be accepted.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is not that the proposition here?

Mr. BAYNE. No; the proposition is to give 50 cents a mile for this service, but not to the lowest responsible bidder. It is known that some of these lines have no competitor at all.

Mr. ELLIS. Only one of them.

Mr. BAYNE. And of course there will be but one bid for the service on such lines. It is not therefore open to that character of competition which I favor. It would be bid up to the 50 cents a mile limit at once by the company where there is no competition. It is ridiculous to suppose that it would not.

Now the gentleman from Michigan stated that the trouble with my speech a few days ago was that it lacked facts on which to base it. One correction was made by the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. Another proposition of mine was that this steamship company received for this entire service last year $23,000, and that the proposition then before the House would have given that company in all probability $312,000. These were facts and they have not been denied, nor can they be denied successfully.

Mr. DINGLEY. That was the maximum amount.

Mr. BAYNE. I know that. I said in all probability it would reach that; and, mark you, they get for about 300,000 miles possibly $150,000, because for that amount of mileage there was no rival to this line, and as a matter of course they would get the 50 cents per mile.

Mr. DINGLEY. But for part of the mail line from San Francisco to China there is competition.

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, I am aware of that. I am taking the gentleman's own speech. I quoted that in making the statement that there was no competition for about one-half of the distance traveled of 288,000 miles.

Mr. DINGLEY. No; 231,000 miles, which includes the line from Panama to San Francisco.

Mr. BAYNE. Very well; but it is a very simple calculation to show that that amount of mileage would give one-half that amount of money. Now, that was a fact which I stated in the debate and nobody appears to have gainsaid it, the gentleman from Michigan or anybody else.

I made another statement, which was that these transcontinental railroad companies were paying this company a subsidy of $95,000 per month.

Mr. HERR. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BAYNE. I will.

Mr. HERR. I have the figures and facts to show that they have received not a single dollar for anything except paying for the heavy freights that they actually transport—not one dollar for anything else.

Mr. BAYNE. I can refer to the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, to be found in the Congressional Library, which makes that statement, and I regard it as authoritative. I do not believe that a journal of that responsibility, acknowledged to be the leading financial journal in this country, whose quotations are regarded as ex cathedra—I do not believe that that journal would make a misstatement of fact, or that if it did that misstatement would go over the country and remain unrefuted. And I say there is to be found in that journal the statement that the Pacific railroad companies pay to this steamship company $95,000 a month as a subsidy. And for what purpose can they pay that? Why, sir, that the steamship company may keep up its rates and thus not come into competition with the transcontinental railway companies.

How does my friend from New York [Mr. HEWITT] know that if this company would conduct its business on business principles and not keep up rates to accommodate these transcontinental railway companies—how does he know but it would get in the natural course of business enough of freight to enable it to declare dividends of 6 or 10 or 12 or even 20 per cent? But meanwhile it is kept out of competition in the interest of these railroad corporations across the continent, and these railroad corporations and this steamship company are identical in many respects outside of that contract.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask the gentleman whether the cut-nail pool of Pittsburgh has succeeded in keeping up rates?

Mr. ANDERSON. Is it not the fact that the Pacific roads pay the Pacific Mail Company $90,000 a month to keep up rates?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, does not the cut-nail pool of his district accomplish that result?

Mr. BAYNE. What the cut-nail pool has to do with it I do not know. If what the cut-nail pool does is all wrong, it does not justify this wrong. My friend from New York, ordinarily very logical, is illogical on this occasion when he assumes to say because the nail pool of Pittsburgh does something wrong, therefore the steamship company and the transcontinental railroads may also do something wrong.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania against cut-nail pools?

Mr. BAYNE. I have nothing to do with that. Nail pools are not before Congress at this time.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The gentleman complains there is likely to be a pool in this matter. I want to know if he is sincere or not by inquiring if he is against pools in his own district.

Mr. BAYNE. My actions speak as to my sincerity. But because there may be pools in one section of country or another that is no reason why this great wrong should be inflicted on the American people. Congress having substantially built those transcontinental railways when the Government ought to have invested the money directly in them and owned them, those very transcontinental railways that we built by the aid of this Government pay out of their treasury to this Pacific Mail Steamship Company $95,000 a month to keep up rates, and then this steamship company, the beneficiary already of Congressional munificence, comes here and asks for a subsidy. It is certainly remarkable that any gentleman having the best interests of this country at heart should advocate a measure of that sort. I am amazed at it. I confess I am amazed that a corporation which is acting in this way toward the shippers and the business men and the farmers and all interested in transportation in this country should come here and ask for a bounty from the Government, and that anybody in Congress should be willing to confer such a benefit.

There is one thing, Mr. Speaker, the American House of Representatives should never do; and that is, it should never depart from the policy of paying for the services rendered to the Government only a fair equivalent. This is but the entering-wedge; $400,000 or $600,000 is a mere bagatelle. That will do nothing to promote American shipping; it will do nothing to encourage commercial relations with other countries. But this is the entering-wedge to get the Government once to adopt the policy of granting subsidies; and then, after we once enter upon this course, there will come to this Capitol from one point or another a lobby of influence and of power, and they will not ask for $600,000, nor $1,000,000, nor $2,000,000, but they will ask for five, or six, or eight, or ten, or twelve, or fifteen millions of dollars. And the effect will be, if we enter upon that policy, to admit a corrupt and corroding influence into the very halls of legislation.

Gentlemen cite foreign countries as having subsidized their shipping lines and built up a merchant marine. That is true enough. But what is the condition of those countries? Why, sir, England has contributed millions of pounds sterling for the purpose of establishing a merchant marine. She has succeeded in doing it, but what has she for that merchant marine? A part of that debt of over four thousand millions of dollars which rests like an incubus on the English people is the heritage left by the adoption of this policy to the people of England. France has pursued the same course and has a great debt from which, however, through her marvelous energy and enterprise, she will probably extricate herself. Spain aided her ship lines, and Spain on one or two occasions has repudiated the interest on her national debt, or failed to meet it. Italy also has adopted the policy of building up a marine in this way. It is like the management of a man who sets himself up in business, borrows his capital, goes to work and has the outward evidences of prosperity about him, but when the day of final judgment comes he must surrender his assets, and his liabilities will absorb them all.

Gentlemen talk about England and France and Italy. Why, sir, the exchequers of each of those countries have been depleted just to the extent that they have aided the establishment of these ship lines. This Government could appropriate five millions, or ten millions, or fifteen millions of dollars a year to establish a merchant marine if it chose to do it. We have the enterprise, the ingenuity, the material—everything that would be needed to establish and carry on such lines; but if we should do that, how would it be done? Simply by taking out the Treasury a certain amount of money raised by taxes on the people for other purposes; yet some men are so wise and so statesmanlike that they profess to see wisdom in that kind of policy. I venture to say, sir, that there is not a business man in this country who conducts his business on that principle who will not ultimately find himself in bankruptcy.

I hope the House will sustain its committee.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] has thirty minutes remaining.

Mr. BAYNE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I propose to close the debate.

Mr. HERR. I do not think that is fair. I submit it to the Speaker and to the sense of fairness of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. I took this debate on the amendment. On the amendment I was to vote to concur, which would have given me the close, and I submit that I should have it now, and I believe the judgment of the gentleman from Indiana will agree with mine on that point.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] will not insist on that. The debate turns entirely upon the motion now pending, and I would not be treating my colleagues fairly if I did not insist on closing the debate. If the gentleman [Mr. HERR] does not wish to occupy the time I will move the previous question at the close of my remarks.

Mr. DORSHEIMER obtained the floor.

Mr. HERR. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER] will occupy his own time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I certainly can not consent to that. I have just stated to the gentleman from Michigan that if he did not desire to occupy the time, in the interest of the dispatch of the public business I would call the previous question.

Mr. HERR. Mr. Speaker, I never ask anything unfair. I intended to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER]; but it is insisted that I shall use my remaining time on a proposition of which I have the affirmative, which is that the House shall concur.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much time is the gentleman willing to yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HERR. Eight minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; I will follow him.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Speaker, the term "subsidy" involves the idea of a gratuity. Now, I entirely agree with those who contend that the Government ought not to grant a gratuity for postal service. Indeed, I will go further, for I suppose that by this time it is well understood in the House that I am opposed to gratuities of any kind, whether given indirectly by tariff taxation or given directly by appropriations out of the Treasury. I would not stand here for a moment to contend in favor of granting gratuities to American steamship lines for carrying the mails.

The only reason which commends itself to my mind for giving to the Postmaster-General the power which is granted by the Senate amendment is that it enables him to pay a reasonable and proper compensation for the service which is rendered to the public. If the Postmaster-General can now, under existing law, pay a reasonable and proper compensation for carrying the mails upon the high seas, then I see no reason for granting him any enlarged powers whatever. But, as I understand the subject, it is not now within his power to pay a proper compensation for what is not only a desirable but for what, I think, must be regarded as a necessary part of the public service. I understand that the compensation which is paid now for carrying the mails from San Francisco, China, and Japan amounts to $3,000 a year, and that under the law that is all the Postmaster-General can pay for that service.

Now I ask gentlemen—in particular I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania who has just taken his seat, and who has professed himself willing to pay a proper compensation for the mail service—I ask him whether this is a proper compensation for carrying the mails from San Francisco to China and Japan?

Why, Mr. Speaker, this country now pays $26,000 a year for carrying the mails by water from Vicksburg to New Orleans, although there are railroads carrying the mails between those two cities. The Government now pays for carrying the mails between New York and New Orleans by sea $14,000 a year, although it is manifest that all the important part of the mails between those two cities must go by rail. Can any man contend that it is a fair thing to pay $14,000 a year to steamship lines for carrying the mails between New York and New Orleans, and only $3,000 a year for doing the mail service between San Francisco and China and Japan?

I say, further inquiry will show gentlemen that the Post-Office Department pays more money for transporting the mails from San Francisco to the Yosemite Valley than it does for sending them from San Francisco to China and Japan.

I would give a Postmaster-General power, as this amendment does, to pay a proper compensation for performing the public service. I would not give him power to expend a dollar in the nature of a subsidy. I have no opinion which would justify me in advocating for a moment a gratuity to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company or to any other company. But it seems to me a monstrous thing to provide this miserable pittance for so great and important a part of the postal service of the United States.

What will happen if these steamers leave the mails on the docks at San Francisco, and if intelligence must be communicated either by cable or by sending the mails from New York to Liverpool and thence to China and Japan by the Isthmus of Suez? That must be the result of leaving this matter in its present situation. I ask the House to assent to the amendment of the Senate—not on the ground that I propose in this way to encourage American shipping at all; for I do not believe in governmental encouragement to any form of industry, whether it be American or foreign. All the protection our industries need is the just enforcement of equal laws. I ask that this amendment be assented to in order that the Department may have the means to pay a reasonable and proper compensation for a necessary and valuable part of the public service.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERR. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS].

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to use these three minutes by offering any argument; it is too late for that. I shall use them only to state some facts which seem pertinent and from which gentlemen may draw their own conclusions.

The Pacific Mail Steamship Company has for fifteen years been doing the business of this Government for about nothing. During those fifteen years it has paid no dividends to its stockholders, directly or indirectly, to the best of my knowledge and belief, except during the last two years; and in these last two years it has paid a dividend of 5 per cent. for each year. That, certainly, is not excessive profit. The item of $95,000, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania stated in a manner which should suggest that it was a subsidy, is money paid for heavy freight which was transported by the steamships of this company because it could be in that way more cheaply transported than by the railway companies, who paid the steamship company which did the business.

During the last year the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has carried the mails of the United States 750,000 miles for $20,000; and of the service thus rendered none has been more valuable than that between this country and Australia. This has brought immediate and valuable results to our commerce. The company has been able to do this business (mark, Mr. Speaker) because the colony of Australia paid the line $400,000 for this service. But the colony of Australia, unwilling to pay exclusively for that which is a benefit to us as well as to it, has withdrawn the subsidy; and hereafter no steamship of the United States will carry our flag to Australia unless we pay for it.

So much for domestic history. Now for two statements connected with foreign commerce. The Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Company of Great Britain has for years received millions of pounds, in return for which it has carried the flag of Great Britain to the East, and brought hundreds of millions to British commerce. Yet nobody has ever objected to continuing the subsidy because the Duke of Westminster was one of its stockholders. Shall the name of Gould—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I trust gentlemen will not overlook the fact that there are two Senate amendments pending, and that both of them are of importance. One only has been referred to in the present debate. The other will claim my attention for a moment.

By that Senate amendment authority is given the Postmaster-General to pay the rent of post-offices of the third class. That involves an increased expenditure for the present of a half million of dollars, and in the very early future of a million dollars. And that, too, Mr. Speaker, with the fact known to the House that during the last session of the last Congress a million of dollars was added to the expense of the postal system by a direct increase of the salaries of the postmasters, a greater portion of the benefits of which went to postmasters of the second, third, and fourth classes. Now it is proposed to add indirectly from a half million to a million more to the compensation of postmasters of the third class alone—a body of public employes now well paid for their services, and whose salaries greatly exceed the compensation paid for similar services in private employments.

I trust gentlemen will not be unmindful of the fact that, however important and valuable the postal service may be, while the duty rests upon Congress to make liberal appropriations for that branch of the public service, there is imminent danger that by successive increases of salaries of postmasters of the various grades you will make it the most extravagant and expensive Department of the Government. In fact, that result is already reached. The importance of this Department is seized upon for excessive and lavish expenditure. This fact appeared in the profligate and corrupt expenditure for the star-route service a few years ago, and also appears in the attempt to subsidize the foreign-mail service on this very bill. I know of no branch of the public service so exposed to profligate and dishonest legislation as our postal system, except that relating to the public land. The special importance of this postal service makes it a shelter for questionable appropriations and dishonest raids on the Treasury.

This valuable branch of the public service is being made use of as an agency by which, to an unwarranted extent, your Treasury is being depleted and the salaries of Government employes increased. The vast body of the employes in this Department, located in every Congressional district and efficient in public affairs and in influencing public opinion, presents an everlasting motive for increased expenditure and enlarged salaries.

I call the attention of gentlemen to the fact there is a remarkable increase made by this bill in the expense of this Department involving an enormous deficiency for the coming year. I hope the proposed amendment of the Senate will be defeated by the intelligence and good sense of the House. But can I be hopeful of that result in view of our past experience?

SUBSIDY.

I come to the other proposition, the subsidy provision, which has been so ably debated—the Senate's proposed increase for the foreign-mail service to the extent of $375,000, making that appropriation in the aggregate, instead of $425,000, $800,000. The amount involved does not alarm me. It is a bagatelle. It is the principle upon which that proposed appropriation rests that fills me with alarm. This is in substance the same as the original proposition defeated in the House, except that it reduces the sum appropriated from $600,000 to $375,000, but the proposition to pay the ship 50 cents per mile for the round voyage without regard to the mail carried, instead of the sea postage on the mail carried, as now and for many years since allowed by law, remains unchanged.

The proposition involves a naked subsidy. It is not compensation, as heretofore, according to the service rendered, but upon the arbitrary basis of a simple subsidy without regard to service, that this proposition rests. It is an arbitrary compensation of so much for the distance the vessel travels per mile, not the value of the services rendered; that underlies this Senate proposition. It is unimportant whether the vessel carries a mail or not, if it carries one letter, the sea postage on which is 2 cents, or no letter at all, the subsidy of 50 cents per mile of ocean travel will be paid.

It has been argued that this is not a subsidy. What is a subsidy? I do not accept the definition of "subsidy" given by the gentleman from New York. It is in its main feature a naked gift. A subsidy in our Government and in all others is that measure of public policy which imposes a burden upon the whole people for the benefit of a favored citizen or of a particular class. I do not care in what form it makes its appearance, when the Government exercises the power of taxing the labor of the whole people and applies a portion of the means drawn from the labor of all to promote any special or particular form of industry, it is a subsidy. Such is the definition of "subsidy" even in its simplest form.

In the present instance it is proposed to encourage our foreign-ship-carrying trade by a subsidy in the most naked and odious form, not by compensating the owners of ships for services rendered in carrying the mails, but upon the arbitrary principle of 50 cents per mile for the ship's voyage, whether a mail be carried or not, promoting the carrying trade at the expense of every other trade, and often it will be found that the trade promoted involves English and not American capital. It has been said by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] that in former years a higher compensation was paid than the 2 cents per letter, being the sea postage.

But as far back as 1864, twenty-one years ago, in the midst of the war and an inflated currency, I find the Postmaster-General of that day, Postmaster-General Blair, making the following statement in regard to this service:

It is not pretended that the compensation now paid is not sufficient for the service rendered. No private person—

And here I call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan—

No private person—

Says the Postmaster-General—

pays them for any kind of transportation at the rate paid by the Government for mail matter; and no persons were so much benefited incidentally as the owners of the ships, for the bulk of the correspondence—

And to this I especially invite the attention of the gentleman from Michigan—the bulk of the correspondence relates to the trade carried on by their vessels.

So, sir, with an extent of mails only equal to 1½ per cent. of the whole foreign mails of the United States transported to China and Japan the gentlemen insist on paying for that merely nominal mail matter 50 cents a mile, more than $3,500 per round trip, and that, too, whether a single letter is carried or not. And all this in a special degree for the benefit of a corporation which has drawn several million dollars from your Treasury without consideration.

You confer upon the Postmaster-General the power to enter into contracts for the transportation of the mails with American vessels bound to foreign ports, and pay them 50 cents per mile for the entire distance traveled whether the mails are carried or not. That will not be denied, I presume. In what particular is that not correct? Yes, sir; common fairness ought to compel the admission that the carrying of the mails is a mere cover. It is a naked subsidy to enrich a few men at the expense of all other laboring interests.

But, sir, again are we confronted by the extraordinary information furnished by the gentleman from New York, who addressed the House so forcibly a few moments since, that the mails would not be carried unless this subsidy is paid. Does he mean that in our service, from our Pacific coast to China and Japan, and between San Francisco and New South Wales and Australia, there is no competition with the single American line, and therefore we are at the mercy of that line, whether the mails are carried or not, and must pay it for mail service, however small it may be, whatever that line may exact? Is it meant to compel the Postmaster-General, whatever be his views on the subject, and whether there is or is not a mail to carry, to pay to the Pacific steamship line the entire 50 cents per mile for the distance from San Francisco to China and Japan and return, for every trip the vessels of that line may make in its commercial business? Does the gentleman mean that, and that this extortion must be submitted to?

I think we shall not be subject to this extortion; for between San Francisco and China and Japan, as well as between San Francisco and Australia, there are competing lines. I admit there is but one line, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, in this region of the oceans that carries the American flag, and yet it is only nominally an American line. A part, at least, of the capital of that company is European capital. But there are competing lines that are carrying the foreign mails from our Pacific ports to-day in common with the Pacific Steamship Company, and have been doing so for years, and they are carrying them upon the basis of our present laws. They are not only carrying them upon that basis, but so far as I know without any complaint, for the compensation is now ample for the service rendered. Will the Pacific Steamship Company, the company fostered by your bounty in former years, built up by your bounty—will they refuse to carry your foreign mails at the present reasonable rates after taking millions of dollars from your Treasury on this same false pretense of promoting your commerce?

No gentleman need be apprehensive that a single letter will fail to be carried to any foreign port, whether in the South Pacific, China, Japan, or any part of the Atlantic or Pacific coast of South America, by reason of your resistance of this extortionate demand of a single corporation and because you refuse this naked subsidy. No, sir, the carrying of the foreign mails is a matter of common interest to all nations, and if vessels claiming to be American will not carry them without subsidy other vessels will, and are glad to do so, at the reasonable rates you have heretofore paid and which other nations pay.

No such apprehension need be felt, for no such disaster as a suspension of your foreign mails will follow. Your foreign mails will be carried as they have been for the last twenty years and upon the same reasonable basis of compensation. You are not at the mercy of the Pacific Steamship Company. I should consider it a great national misfortune if you were, for the national honor is of more moment than even your foreign mails, and, as gentlemen well know, that is involved in the subsidizing of that line.

But, Mr. Speaker, I come to another view of this matter—that presented by the superintendent of the foreign mail service, a gentleman who has been connected with this service for the last eleven or twelve years, and a man of wide experience in the needs of the service. I beg the indulgence of the House while I present his views. In a letter to me, of recent date, he says:

MY DEAR SIR: As requested by you, when I met you by appointment in your committee-room, I have looked over the Hunt bill—

He refers to the bill now pending in the House, which is embodied in this Senate amendment, but proposes $1 instead of 50 cents a mile as the subsidy for carrying the foreign mails—and beg to hand you herewith some suggestions with regard thereto; and to add, reciting the general theory and tenor of the bill, payment for mail service to foreign parts on the basis of distance alone; first, that the views of this Department since my connection with this office, in 1874, have been adverse to that principle—

And I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan particularly to this point, for this, as I have said, is from the superintendent of foreign mails—

have been adverse to that principle and in favor of basing compensation upon weight of mails and distance (see Postmaster-General's report for 1883); and that foreign postal administrations, which heretofore have subsidized largely these steamships, are introducing this latter principle—

The principle of compensation according to the service actually rendered, and not the arbitrary proposition of this measure—

Mr. HERR. This is just what it is proposed to do here—to pay what the steamships earn.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; the reverse is correct. I continue to read—are introducing this latter principle in recent contracts in preference to the subsidy plan. Great Britain, for instance, in contracts now in force for mail service to South America, the United States, the West Indies, and the west coast of Africa, pays for transportation on the basis of the amount of correspondence conveyed by the packet.

The postmaster-general of New South Wales, in his report for 1883, alluding to a contract made by his administration with the Oriental Steamship Company for mail conveyance between that colony and England, remarks as follows: "Another important feature in the contract is that the government pays no fixed subsidy for mail-matter conveyed; a fair payment per pound being made to the company."

Thus showing that the system of paying large subsidies for the conveyance of ocean-going mails will be a thing of the past.

And yet, sir, the policy of Great Britain is invoked in behalf of the subsidy proposed by the pending measure. Even Great Britain abandons this monarchical principle of subsidy. Even she can not afford to tax all of her people for the benefit of the few.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana to say that the policy of Great Britain to-day is to pay a simple ordinary compensation for carrying its foreign mails?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; I have read the statement of our foreign mails superintendent to that effect—so much per pound.

Mr. DINGLEY. How does it happen, then, that in the last report of the postmaster-general of Great Britain I find it stated in a table now before me that the amount paid for mail service to the West Indies and Mexico was $420,115, and that this amount was in excess of all amounts received from postage to those countries $265,000? That is according to the last report of the postmaster-general.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the gentleman's question, and my answer is simply this: The superintendent of our foreign mail service has submitted the letter I have just read to a committee of this House; and I certainly rely upon his statement with much greater confidence than upon any statement that comes through an unofficial channel.

Mr. DINGLEY. But here is the statement of the British postmaster-general.

Mr. HOLMAN. And here is the statement of the superintendent of your own foreign mail service, and he is as likely to be well informed as any of us.

Mr. DINGLEY. As the British postmaster-general?

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose the gentleman does not question the authenticity of this document I have read. I will say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], as I have already said, that I have simply presented the language of the superintendent of our foreign mails. Upon his authority I make the statement that the policy of even Great Britain is to pay for the service rendered instead of on the principle of an arbitrary subsidy. But if Great Britain still adhered to the subsidy system it certainly would not modify the views of an American Congressman. Great Britain, by giving full effect to the principle of subsidy for centuries, has increased enormously her wealth, but it is the wealth that gives overgrown estates to the few and consigns the body of her people to poverty and wretchedness. Whether she abandons the subsidy system in her ocean postal service or not, the fact remains that her monarchical system of government rests on the principle of subsidy.

Such are the natural fruits of subsidy. It could always have been taken for granted that Great Britain would give up her subsidy system as the intelligence and power of her people increased. I hear with regret the oft-made appeal to the experience of foreign governments, when dealing with our American policy. Are we to adopt their policy and accept the inevitable results? Show me a single nation of Europe—England, France, Italy, Spain, or Portugal—that has attempted to promote special industries and commercial interests by payments from the public resources that has not produced sooner or later and perpetuated the same results; a class of men of excessive wealth and overgrown fortune, and a great body of wretched and impoverished people. Subsidy, in the nature of things, produces the extremes of wealth and poverty—a result fatal to a republic. Great estates and a people in wretchedness and poverty are the ripened fruits of subsidy in all lands and in every age. I do not think, sir, that gentlemen are happy in alluding to the policy of other governments when that policy has produced the poverty and misery of the many in the excessive enrichment of the few.

But, sir, we are told by the gentleman from New York that here in our own country, between New York and New Orleans and on our great railroad routes, we are paying vast sums of money for the transportation of our mails. Does the gentleman propose to compare the policy of this Government in diffusing intelligence among its own people to the policy it ought to adopt in its commerce with foreign powers?

Why was your Post-Office Department established as one of the great agencies of your Government? Why was it made one of the great Departments of your Government? It was not that it should be a source of revenue; it was not for the promotion of your commerce and your carrying trade, but it was to the end that intelligence should be everywhere diffused. The men who based their government on intelligence and virtue sought to utilize that agency for the universal diffusion of intelligence. Therefore to every region of the United States, whatever the expense may be, the mails must be carried.

Such is not the state of things with reference to our relations with any of the foreign countries of the world. Between us and them it is simply a matter of national and commercial intercourse—nothing more. A single additional word. I have in a somewhat extended experience in Congress seen almost the rise of the direct subsidy system in this Government. It is a feature of modern times; the last quarter of a century covers almost entirely the period of subsidy in our Government. It acquired its greatest control of Congress when our people were watching with anxiety and alarm the movement of armies in our great civil war.

I have watched its workings during a period of more than twenty-five years. I saw the enormous grants carried through this House of lands intended by our fathers for homesteads for our people to the great corporations which now wield such fearful and perilous power in the affairs of this Government. I saw hundreds of millions of acres of the public domain granted away, in the spirit of subsidy, to a few favored citizens building up imperial fortunes and depriving millions of our people at an early period of independent homes. I saw the modest bill pass this House which granted the first subsidy to the line of vessels running between our shores and the Sandwich Islands; and the bill carried through to subsidize on the pretense of promoting the ship-carrying interest between New York and Brazil. I saw the passage of the first bill subsidizing the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; and, sir, every step that was taken in that march of subsidy was leading steadily toward the inevitably fatal result, and that result came, sir, when that company came into this Hall and demanded its additional subsidy of $500,000 a year for ten years, and filled the land with astonishment and shame. Do gentlemen wish to re-establish that period of national dishonor?

About twelve years ago, sir, under circumstances not unlike those around us, came the bill granting the additional subsidy of half a million to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company into this Hall. You had granted the first half-million per year for ten years, without its encountering anything but a fair and earnest opposition and with apparently an honorable support. I heard the bill read at that desk which was to grant the additional half a million a year for ten years. I saw the agencies by which it passed this House. I saw the events transpiring here which took $750,000 from your Treasury for purposes of national dishonor, which closed these doors forever against once honored representatives of the people. I saw those events, sir, and they shall never be repeated while I am here without one voice at least being raised against them. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PHELPS] has spoken of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company as a corporation which has never received any aid or any adequate compensation for carrying your mails. Sir, you granted that corporation $10,000,000 by two acts of Congress.

Mr. HERR. When? Not this corporation.

Mr. HOLMAN. You granted the Pacific Mail Steamship Company $10,000,000 by two acts of Congress. You gave that last subsidy on the condition of the building of ships that were never built. I grant you those great subsidies were but partially paid; Congress in that hour of humiliation repealed the subsidies begot in dishonor. Who has not felt humiliated in recalling the history of that period? Commence with the first subsidy bill of our time, passed in 1832, only twenty-two years ago, and follow the history of that policy down to the time when that last subsidy of half a million was voted for the benefit of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, a subsidy so promptly annulled by Congress when the method of its passage was disclosed, and you will find that you are all the time tracing the progress of national humiliation.

I trust, sir, as I have had occasion to say before, that at the very outset of this new epoch, at the beginning of a period of reform, Congress will promptly and with honorable emphasis defeat this measure. Subsidy has no place in a Democratic administration; but if you intend that the very fountains of law shall be stained and polluted, then organize once more the forces and give a new life to the spirit of subsidy; and then, sir, a sense of national shame will rest again upon the brows of the American people. How can it be otherwise? I speak, sir, in the interest of honest government. I speak for purity in legislation. I speak for that virtue upon which republicanism must rest, when I protest against measures of policy by which the interests of a few are promoted at the expense of the great body of our people. The rates paid for your foreign mail service is ample; this measure is not an honest provision for carrying the mails.

Mr. HERR. They have reduced it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not a cent. The compensation is the same to-day that it was then.

Mr. HERR. How so?

Mr. HOLMAN. The sea postage then was the same as the sea postage now. Let my friend look at the law; he will see that the rate of 2 cents per letter has stood unchanged for twenty-two years.

Mr. HERR. Since 1874.

Mr. HOLMAN. The act of which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] complains was passed years ago. The compulsory act was passed twenty-one years ago. Your Postmaster-General deemed the rate sufficient even when the purchasing power of your money was scarcely 50 per cent. of what it is at the present time. Yet now you revive the idea of encouraging your carrying trade—not your commerce, for that grows every hour, but your carrying trade—by taxing the whole people to build up the wealth of a few individuals.

I enter my protest against this measure as wholly un-American, and I indulge the confident hope that, with the experience which is yet fresh in the minds of all men, this perfidious and dangerous and corrupt policy will not be re-entered upon. I trust that in the closing hours of this Congress, when we are about to return to our homes to meet our constituents, we will resolve to meet them with the consciousness that we have again condemned as never to be repeated a measure of policy at war with our system of Government and hostile to the purity of our legislation.

Mr. HERR. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have eleven minutes left.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eleven minutes remaining if he desires to use it.

Mr. HERR. I do. I yield six minutes of that time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments numbered 9, 12, 13, 14, 26, 27, 28, 35, 41, 42, 74, 75, 76, 110, 111, 112, and 113 to the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. RANSOM as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7785) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I purpose in the brief time allowed me to say a few words on the "subsidy" question. I for one shall vote to concur in the amendment of the Senate. The term "subsidy" has no terrors for me in this connection. There is no proposition in this amendment to take money out of the Treasury and donate it to any steamship company. It is simply a proposition by competition among shippers to do for our foreign commerce and intercommunication of our fellow-citizens the same thing that is done by the star-route service on the land. Suppose, sir, that our star service were confined to those routes upon which the revenue derived from 2 cents on each letter carried could pay the expense of the route. In that case not many routes could be maintained six months of the year. Why, sir, we pay seven or eight million dollars annually for the star service; and where does three-fourths of the money come from that sustains this service? It comes from New York, Philadelphia, and other large cities or depot towns on the great trunk lines of railroad where the revenue from postage is largely in excess of the expenditure.

I am astonished, sir, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], hailing from a State that is almost unanimous for protection, should call the proposition of the Senate to develop our foreign trade and re-establish our merchant marine, which necessarily will re-establish our Navy—I say, sir, I am surprised that he should call this a "subsidy" and complain of it as such. While with one breath he does this, he thinks it only right that every steamship built in this country should be compelled to buy its iron and steel from the Pennsylvania mongers because no others in this country produce the materials that enter into iron-ship building. Sir, in that respect he is like many other gentlemen, many other communities, and even States of this Union—for free trade abroad, but monopoly at home.

Why, sir, it can not possibly take any money out of the Treasury if we concur in this amendment of the Senate. Already there is in the Treasury a surplus of $760,000 from foreign ocean postage, when you deduct the interior postage on the foreign mail matter. The Senate's amendment provides only that the Postmaster-General, if he thinks fit, may use as much as $400,000—a fraction more than half of the present surplus ocean postage—to subsidize, if you choose to call it so, our mail steamers to foreign countries with a view to establishing better communication, developing commerce, restoring our commercial marine and our Navy, which every American North, South, East, or West ought to pray and work to see revived. [Applause]. As I said a moment ago, there is no proposition here to take money out of the Treasury. There is today a deficiency of over $3,000,000 in the revenues of the Post-Office Department on land; but for the surplus upon foreign ocean postage that deficiency would be $760,000 more. The proposition here is simply to let about half the surplus foreign ocean postage be used to develop our communication and commerce abroad just as all the home postage may be said to be used for the development of our star-route service. The sparsely settled agricultural and grazing sections of the South and West should be just to the commercial and manufacturing East.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOER] has five minutes remaining.

Mr. HOER. Mr. Speaker, I have heard nothing yet in this debate replying to the statement I first made that this Senate amendment simply pays these ships for the work they actually do, when you take into account the miles they must travel. Why has not somebody had something to say on this point which is the gist of this debate? My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] skipped that branch of this question. No man has attempted to point out that this amendment gives excessive pay for the work performed. No one denies that it increases the present pay very largely; but my position was that it ought to be increased. If such is not the case why has not some one made it appear?

Let me again repeat, this proposition is not a subsidy. It does not pay a penny a mile more to our own vessels than we give to vessels carrying foreign flags. It is a simple proposition to pay what these steamers earn—that is all there is of it—as we do in the case of the coastwise service, or, as was suggested by my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], in the star-route service. If we should compel the contractors on the star routes to carry the mails for the small revenue derived from the few letters put into their bags, you would not have a mile of star service running in the United States in six weeks, because under such an arrangement the contractors could not live. We pay for carrying the mail on the star routes according to what it is worth, taking into account the distance traveled; and that is right. That is all we ask in regard to this ocean mail service. This is not a subsidy in any true sense. I would not care if it were.

I am ready to help build up the commerce on the great seas in behalf of my country, and to let other countries take care of themselves. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is happy when we will do anything to set the forges ablaze and the wheels running in Pennsylvania, but the moment we ask for fair pay for the work done by vessels built in the factories of his State, then he cries, "Subsidy!" Then he begins to use the clap-trap about Gould and somebody else to prejudice the minds of people and frighten them. Now, I do hope, Mr. Speaker, we shall rise above that kind of clap-trap. I use the word in a high literary sense, not intending to offend my friend from Pennsylvania. But it is the merest clap-trap to talk about subsidy and monopolies and corporations in connection with this Senate amendment, which simply makes a square business proposition to pay these steamers which are built in America and owned here what the work is worth for the miles actually traveled—nothing more.

This bill gives to American vessels just the same amount that it gives to the vessels of foreign countries. Is there a man here who to-day is going to vote against his own country and in favor of the rest of the world? If so, he parts company with me at once. I am for the United States of America first, and the rest of the world afterward—a good while afterward, too. If I had my way, I would build up this country and let the rest of the world take care of itself. When a statesman has properly attended to the interests of his own nation, he will have but little time for missionary work; what time he has I am willing he should use in that way. But this amendment of the Senate is in the interest of our own nation, our own people, our own commerce; and I believe this House will stand by this Senate amendment simply because it is just, because it is American, because it is solely in the interest of our own people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know how much time is left to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are thirteen minutes of the time of the gentleman from Indiana now remaining.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I would like to know further what disposition the gentleman from Indiana proposes to make of that time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the understanding was that I should yield to the gentleman from Mississippi for ten minutes, and that then the floor should be yielded to the gentleman from Illinois in order to call the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Mississippi for ten minutes.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allowed me I desire to ask the attention of the House to the first Senate amendment, which provides for leases of third-class post-offices. There is no distinction which can be made in justice between first, second, and third class offices.

And my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was mistaken when he said the difference only is in degree. The difference is marked in kind. Why should a man whose salary runs from one to two thousand dollars be compelled to pay his own rent, when a man whose salary is above that shall have his rent paid by the Government? There is no reason in it and there is no justice.

But, sir, when we reach the fourth-class postmasters whose salaries run from a thousand dollars down, there is a reason why they should not have a right to have their rent paid by the Government, because the man who holds a fourth-class office in a majority of cases does not hold it for the salary at all, but for the accommodation of his neighborhood.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is not that true of the third-class offices?

Mr. MONEY. Not at all. Fourth-class postmasters are men who are in business as merchants and shop-keepers of various kinds, and these men use the building as a post-office in which their proper business is conducted. This is not their vocation but their avocation and established place of business in which the post-office is located. There is no reason why the Government should pay them their rent, but when a man reaches a Presidential office, the third class being the lowest of that kind, he then conducts this business alone not connected with any other business whatever. This man must rent a building for special use and service of the post-office and for nothing else. He is unable to attend to the office which pays over a thousand dollars a year and also to attend to any other business. If he does the clerk-hire is entailed upon him for that purpose. Therefore it is reasonable and just in offices of the third class they should have their rent paid by the Government as in the case of second and third class postmasters.

The amount of increase has been fairly stated, I think, by my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to be about one-half million dollars. There are 1,838 post-offices of the third class. All these postmasters to-day pay their own rent. It can be said easily that these gentlemen have the great American privilege of resigning the office if it did not suit their purse and convenience. And so can any of us here resign.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is a question of justice whether we shall properly pay for the expenditures naturally attending the postal service of this country, and I hope this House will not be so niggardly as to refuse an appropriation of half a million dollars, or as much more as will be necessary to conduct its service.

Can any gentleman assign a good reason why a man holding a third-class office, whose pay is $1,950 a year, shall pay his own office-rent, while the man who gets $50 more shall have his rent paid by the Government?

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. These third-class officers are paid by commissions on the receipts of their offices, and they nearly absorb entirely the amount of postal receipts in those offices.

Mr. MONEY. The gentleman is right to the extent that these salaries are based on the business that is done in these offices. But, Mr. Speaker, it is simply a question of justice to the House. Do you insist this one class of postmasters holding Presidential offices shall pay their own rent, while the second and third class offices have their rent paid by the Government? Not only do the first and second class postmasters have their rent paid for them, but the Government also supplies their lights and fuel and their incidental expenses. The postmasters of the third class have nothing of these things. It is only to extend to them the one single item of rent, and nothing more. They will still have their light and fuel, except in case of separating offices, to be paid out of their salaries as postmasters. There is no justice in this; there is no economy in this.

And suppose it costs not only half a million but a million and a half, is that any reason why it should be denied? Are we to adopt a principle that a citizen is to do as much as possible for as little as possible? Are we not to deal fairly and honestly and justly with our own people and our own Federal employes? Is there any reason why a man should be treated harshly and unjustly and illiberally by Congress because he happens to be an official of the Government? That is a rule of injustice that we do not carry out with regard to ourselves, or to any of the other officials connected with the Government except these third-class postmasters. Their case is a very singular one, without a parallel in any other service of the Government; and it is impossible for this House, in my opinion, to fail to concur in the amendment of the Senate.

I desire to yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] with the exception of one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. MONEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York. Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads one year ago reported to this House a bill granting an allowance of rent to third-class post-offices. A bill now lies on the Speaker's table from the Senate having the same object in view. There are in this country to-day 50,000 post-offices.

Our friends upon the other side are beginning to think there must be a million or more, but I can tell them there are only 50,000. They are trying to stand from under the avalanche of letters and petitions pouring down upon them. But out of the 50,000 post-offices 48,000 of them are fourth-class offices; that is, offices paying an annual salary of from a thousand dollars down to 9 cents. There are only 81 first-class offices in the country; 404 second-class offices where the salary is $2,000 or upward, and 1,845 third-class offices ranging from $1,000 upward.

Now, the line is drawn at $2,000. Why not draw the line at $1,000? I will give one single illustration which will show the injustice of the present law rating the compensation of these offices: Suppose the postmaster at an office receives a salary of $1,900. Out of this he must pay his own office-rent, his own clerk-hire, and pay for his fuel and all the incidental expenses of the office, all of which must come out of the $1,900. In the very same county a postmaster may receive a salary of $2,000, and when it reaches that sum the Government steps in and pays him his rent, his clerk-hire, his fuel, and all. Does anything better illustrate that verse in Scripture, which I will quote: "Unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath?"

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MONEY. I now yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER] have so thoroughly covered the subject of the difference between the two Houses on this particular question, that I think one minute will be ample for what I desire to say. This fact I want to impress upon the House: in the rural sections of the country they will receive the full benefit of this proposed change in the law. Districts such as I represent will receive no benefit whatever. The Senate has sent here to this House from its Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads a bill covering this subject. That bill lies upon the Speaker's table. The Committee of the House have recommended a similar bill. That stands on the Calendar of the House. Had a day been given to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads for the consideration of their business in this Congress we would have carried this legislation through the House. It comes to this to-day—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate has expired.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why I hardly began, and had not reached my point.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move the previous question on the adoption of the report of the conference committee.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BINGHAM. We want to know how we can reach a vote on these separate amendments.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. After the adoption of the report we will have a vote taken upon each amendment separately, if desired.

The question being taken on the adoption of the report, it was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The first amendment was read, as follows:

Amendment numbered 3, page 2, line 16: Strike out the word "hereafter."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Amendment numbered 4, page 2, line 16: Strike out the word "lease" and insert "in the disbursement of this appropriation apply part thereof to the purpose of leasing."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to my friend that the next two amendments be read and coupled with this.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am willing to do that. Let them be read.

Amendment numbered 5 was read, as follows:

Page 2, line 17, strike out the word "and."

And amendment numbered 6:

Page 2, same line, after the word "second," insert the words "and third."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to these three amendments; and upon that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. MONEY. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments and agree to the same.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What becomes of my motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] has preference.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am aware of that; but I wanted to have the previous question ordered so as to prevent debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the motion of the gentleman from Illinois can not be put before the House till the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] is disposed of. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi, which is that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate which have just been read and agree to the same.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 118, noes 18.

Mr. HOLMAN. As this matter involves half a million of dollars of additional salaries, I ask for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 25—not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. Count the other side.

The negative vote being counted, there were noes 131.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered; and the motion of Mr. MONEY was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read amendment of the Senate numbered 16, as follows:

On page 8, lines 179, 180, and 181, strike out the following:

"For transportation of foreign mails including railway transit across the Isthmus of Panama, $425,000."

And in lieu thereof insert as follows:

"For transportation of foreign mails, including railway transit across the Isthmus of Panama, $900,000. And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the transportation of any part of said foreign mails, after legal advertisement with the lowest responsible bidder, at a rate not exceeding 50 cents a nautical mile on the trip each way actually traveled between the terminal points: Provided, That the mails so contracted shall be carried on American steamships, and that the aggregate of such contracts shall not exceed one-half of the sum hereby appropriated."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment; and upon that I call for the previous question.

Mr. HERR. I move that the House recede from its disagreement, and agree to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Gentlemen who are opposed to this proposition I presume vote "no," and those in favor of it vote "ay."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same. All in favor of that motion will say "ay" when their names are called, and those opposed to it will say "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 132, not voting 63; as follows:

So the motion to concur was not agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names of members voting.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I would like to have my name recorded.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman from Ohio in the Hall when his name was called?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I was not. If permitted to vote, I would vote "no."

The following members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. JOHN S. WISE.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. RICE.

Mr. LONG with Mr. BURNES, on the Senate amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill. Mr. LONG would vote "ay" and Mr. BURNES "no."

Mr. RANDALL with Mr. KEIFER, on the Post-Office appropriation bill. On the proposition for a subsidy Mr. RANDALL would vote "no" and Mr. KEIFER "ay."

Mr. MORSE with Mr. RYAN, on the Post-Office appropriation bill. Mr. RYAN would vote against the proposition for a subsidy and Mr. MORSE for it.

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. HUTCHINS, on the Post-Office appropriation bill. Mr. FORNEY would vote against the proposition for a subsidy and Mr. HUTCHINS for it.

Mr. BLOUNT with Mr. MURRAY, on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. WASHBURN, on the Senate amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, on this vote.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. STONE, on this vote.

Mr. HARDEMAN with Mr. HOLMES, on this vote.

Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. PETITBONE, for this day.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. KELLEY, for this day.

Mr. KLEINER with Mr. FINERTY, for this day.

Mr. COOK with Mr. MILLIKEN, on this vote. Mr. COOK would vote against the amendment and Mr. MILLIKEN for it.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE, who had voted "ay," said: I was announced as paired with Mr. MORRISON. I do not know how I became paired, but lest this should be regarded as a political question I withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, my motion now is that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment; and upon that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that by an agreement made between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORN] the debate was to be confined to the discussion of the conference report, which included debate upon these amendments as well.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Therefore the previous question is not necessary.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Very well.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment numbered 17.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, all the sections that follow upon which there is a disagreement relate to the 10-cent stamp. I ask unanimous consent that the reading be omitted, and I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to those amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. TOWNSHEND, Mr. HOLMAN, and Mr. HORN.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent—
Mr. VALENTINE. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the Journal of the House is now completed.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I will wait until after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, so that at any rate the gentleman could not have his request granted. By order of the House the reading of the Journal was postponed until it should be completed. It is now ready and the Clerk will read the Journal of yesterday.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday. After he had made some progress therein,

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to suspend the reading of the Journal in order that I may present a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, does that mean that it shall be suspended entirely, or only for the time being?

The SPEAKER. It means that the reading of the Journal shall be dispensed with.

Mr. WELLER. I object.

Mr. ELLIS. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. WELLER. If it was only for the time required for you to introduce your report I should have no objection, but when it is proposed to dispense entirely with the reading of the Journal, I do object.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and dispense with the reading of the Journal, and on that motion I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The previous question can not apply. Under the rules of the House, on a motion to suspend the rules thirty minutes is allowed for debate. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER] does not object to the postponement of the further reading of the Journal until after the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] has made his conference report.

Mr. ELLIS. Very well. I now submit the report and ask to have it read.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House 7970, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

E. JOHN ELLIS,
W. S. HOLMAN,
THOMAS RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. L. DAWES,
P. B. PLUMB,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask that the statement of the House conferees which accompanies this report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the Indian service for the fiscal year 1886, submit the following written statement in explanation of the accompanying report:

The bill as it is agreed upon appropriates $5,737,512.70, being $72,335.90 greater than as it passed the House, $130,742.80 less than as it passed the Senate, $101,200.21 less than the law for the current year, and $1,570,536.94 less than the estimates submitted for the fiscal year 1886.

The conference committee have been unable to agree upon the following amendments, namely:

On amendments numbered 9, 12, 13, 14, 25, 35, 41, 42, 75, and 76, which amendments on the part of the Senate strike from the bill as it passed the House, provisions to pay claims for damages caused by depredations of certain Indians.

On amendment 27, which strikes out the provision to extend the time of payment of the purchase-money for the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians sold under the act of August 7, 1882.

On amendment 28, which strikes out the provision to extend the time of payment of the purchase-money under the sale of the reservation of the confederate tribe of Otoe and Missourias Indians.

On amendment 74, which strikes out the provision to pay the expenses of the delegates of the Eastern Band of Cherokees and for their services in visiting Washington.

On amendments 110, 111, 112, and 113, which strike from the bill sections 8, 9, 10, and 11 thereof.

E. JNO. ELLIS,
W. S. HOLMAN,
THOS. RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ELLIS. I move the adoption of this report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. ELLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, in reference to this bill there are still two principal points of disagreement between the House and the Senate. In the first place the House inserted in the bill a number of items proposing to pay white citizens for depredations committed by the Indians, such payment being in accordance with treaty stipulation with the Indians. The Senate insisted that those items be stricken out, upon the ground that there are already claims of this character to the amount of about $5,000,000 pending against the Indians, claims which have been accumulating since 1863, and have now reached this enormous sum.

The Senate, with a good deal of plausibility, thought we should not make "fish of one and flesh of another;" that we should not pay a portion of these claims and leave others unpaid, all of them being of equal dignity and having originated in the same way.

In the second place, they say these claims have not been fully examined—have not been examined with that care which should attend their examination. There is also some force in that.

In the third place, they say that numerous amendments were offered by Senators proposing to put a large number of these claims upon the bill; but upon the assurance of the committee that none of these claims were to be allowed the Senators withdrew uniformly such amendments.

This is one of the principal causes of disagreement between the House and the Senate on the bill. The House took the view that while it was impossible to pay all or even approximately all of these claims during this year, yet that some measure should be taken looking to their eventual payment; and, further, that a few of them should be placed upon the bill as somewhat in the nature of a warning to the Indians themselves that if they depredated upon the property of the white people their treaty funds should be held responsible for all damages. That is substantially the position of the House and Senate with regard to this particular point.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Louisiana a question for information with reference to the auditing of these claims.

Mr. ELLIS. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask my friend from Louisiana what office audited the claims that are placed in this bill?

Mr. ELLIS. The Indian Office.

Mr. BLOUNT. My object is this: as far as my information goes I am not aware that there is any officer who is authorized to audit that class of claims for reference to Congress, in order that appropriations may be applied for the purpose of their liquidation, as in the case of quartermaster's claims and others which are audited under the general law.

Mr. ELLIS. These claims have been audited by the Secretary of the Interior through the Indian Office, and have likewise been examined by the Indian Committees of the two Houses.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know if they have been examined by any auditor or comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. ELLIS. No.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then they do not come here as audited claims.

Mr. ELLIS. The law does not require it, but only that they shall be examined by the Secretary of the Interior through the Indian Office.

Mr. BLOUNT. This appears to be a new feature, this bringing in of the Indian depredation claims and making provision for their payment on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ELLIS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, it has been so for years and years. It was done in the appropriation bill of last year, and the year before that, and for many years prior. The Senate has always been putting some of these Indian claims upon the appropriation bills, and permit me to say it has been done in strict pursuance of treaty stipulations. I believe in every treaty which we have made with the Indians they have uniformly agreed that in cases where their people depredate upon the property of the whites an examination into the alleged depredations should be made by the Secretary of the Interior and the tribal fund held responsible for the damage.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will my friend allow me to say that I am quite sure, after six years' service on that committee, that they were carefully excluded from the Indian appropriation bill on the ground that there was no law authorizing it.

Mr. ELLIS. I will not challenge my friend's memory, and can only say that for the four years in which I have served on that committee these claims have been here.

Mr. BLOUNT. It may be that my friend consented. I did not.

Mr. ELLIS. The House proposed and the Senate conferees concurred that these claims shall undergo full and thorough investigation. The Senate proposes that an appropriation of $10,000 shall be made to enable the Secretary of the Interior to make a careful examination of all these claims and make a list of them as they are examined and approved by that commission, which list shall be presented to Congress so soon as the examination can be had for such action as Congress may deem wise or necessary to take; a measure in the wisdom of which I fully concur.

The second point of difference was in regard to the allowance due for the payment of a portion of the purchase-money for the Omaha Indian reservation; also in reference to extending the time for the payment of the purchase-money due the confederate bands of Otoes and Missourias. The conference committee did not challenge the equity or wisdom of the provision, but they rested upon the ground that these provisions embodied general legislation and the Senate rules forbid general legislation upon an appropriation bill. That point we did not discuss very far with these gentlemen.

The third and last point of difference was in regard to the appropriation of $4,000 to pay some Cherokee delegates their traveling and other expenses (an amendment which was offered by my friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] and I hope we will hear from him on that), incurred in representing the interests of their tribe here. These are, Mr. Speaker, in substance, the points of disagreement between the Senate and House conferees.

Mr. BUDD. May I ask the gentleman one or two questions?

Mr. ELLIS. Certainly.

Mr. BUDD. I do not see the gentleman from Georgia here, but is it not a fact that this is the first time that the House has placed the Indian depredation claims upon an appropriation bill?

Mr. ELLIS. It is, I think, since I have had anything to do with it.

Mr. BUDD. Is it not a fact that the Senate of the United States at the last session of Congress, and on the bill which passed the Senate and the House, insisted upon some thirty claims of this character?

Mr. ELLIS. That is correct, as I remember.

Mr. BUDD. And has not that been the practice of the Senate for years?

Mr. ELLIS. To the best of my knowledge, yes.

Mr. BUDD. For several years past?

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman submit?

Mr. ELLIS. I have no motion to submit. I yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. RYAN].

The SPEAKER. There is nothing before the House unless a motion is made.

Mr. ELLIS. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair desires to state the conference report has been disposed of, and unless some motion is made—

Mr. ELLIS. I will move, then, that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

Mr. RYAN. I was about to make the same motion in regard to Senate amendment numbered 9, with the view of testing the judgment of the House. We are so near the close of the session that for my own part I desire to throw the responsibility upon the House.

The difference between the two Houses or between the conferees on the part of the House and those on the part of the Senate relates to two subjects. One is the depredation claims that the House put upon this bill; the other is the legislation that the House put upon this bill. I want the House to clearly understand the issue; and then for myself (and I think for the other conferees) I desire to have the intelligent judgment of the House, and we shall act in accordance with such instructions as the House may give.

In regard to depredation claims, I have this to say: About $40,000—I have not figured it up to ascertain the exact amount—is appropriated out of the annuities due to Indians for the depredations that they have committed upon the property of white persons. This appropriation is made in accordance with treaty stipulations. Every claim put upon this bill has been audited in the manner prescribed by the treaty. First, the question has been submitted to the Indians themselves, and in almost every instance they agreed that the depredations were committed. Next, the agent at the agency investigated the claims. Next, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs investigated the claims and reported them to Congress, declaring that a certain amount was due. These were in turn referred by the House to the proper committee, the Committee on Indian Affairs, and in every instance where a depredation claim appears in this bill it was reported favorably by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The Senate, I want to say in passing, for several years past has put similar claims audited in precisely the same manner upon these Indian appropriation bills, and the House agreed to them. But now the Senate conferees say in regard to these claims, "it is true these claims have been audited in accordance with treaty stipulations. They appear to be all right upon their face; but it is so late in the session that we can not ourselves personally investigate them, and we do not think it wise or prudent to agree to them unless we do investigate them." I think I have stated it fairly. All I care about it is that by a vote of this House it shall declare whether its managers shall insist upon the disagreement, or whether they shall surrender these claims. I have nothing further to say about them.

The other point of difference relates to legislation upon this bill. In regard to that its importance is conceded. Some of it is regarded as indispensable to the preservation of the public peace. Disorderly Indians, whose conduct of late created alarm along the border, armed with the modern rifle are daily committing depredations upon every species of property they can reach. We provide in this bill that the President may in his discretion take arms from those Indians and compensate them for them.

That is all there is of that provision. That is conceded to be just. With regard to one of these tribes, one of the most turbulent and disorderly, and one of the most savage we have to deal with, we are supplying them with appropriations exceeding $300,000 annually to feed them, as a gratuity. We are obliged to make contracts to supply them with food. The contractors by the terms of the contract are obliged to keep the cattle in the vicinity of those Indians to supply them week after week, and yet the Indians raid these herds of cattle and destroy them. What is the result? The result is that hereafter it will be almost impossible for the Government to make contracts to supply these Indians. It will only be able to do so by the contractor taking into consideration the great risk he has to incur, and therefore the Government will be compelled to pay a most extraordinary price for these supplies.

These Indians, as I have said, are armed with the modern rifle. It is from them we would take these arms and put them in the pathway of civilizing influences.

But the reply comes from the conferees on the part of the Senate: "This is legislation; it is late in the session; we do not think there is time sufficient for us to give a subject of this kind that serious and deliberate consideration that we should, and besides that it is a violation of the rules of the Senate and we can not agree to it."

Now, the Senate rule seems to be somewhat peculiar. If there be a Senate rule upon the subject, if I may judge from the action of the Senate upon appropriation bills at this session of Congress, it can have but one construction, and it is this, that that rule prohibits upon an appropriation bill legislation that originates in the House, but allows upon an appropriation bill legislation that originates in the Senate, because I see here in this very bill that there is legislation inserted by the Senate itself. In the face of that fact, admitting that this legislation is correct, admitting that it is important to the preservation of public peace on the border, they still say it is legislation originating upon an appropriation bill in the House of Representatives, and they therefore can not under their rules consider it. I have presented, I think, the whole subject so far as legislation is concerned in what I have said, because what I have said applies to the rest of the legislation in this bill.

I want to say further that another paragraph of legislation in this bill authorizes the President of the United States to negotiate with certain Indians in regard to opening a certain section of the Indian Territory now in dispute to settlement under the homestead law. That is a matter of great concern. A large number of the people of the country believe that the land in question is public domain. They believe that the Indians have no reserved interest in it, the fact being that the Government has paid for it what it agreed to pay for it, but the further fact being that it bought it from the Indians for a specific purpose.

That specific purpose the Indians hold to be a trust—that is, they claim that we hold it in trust for that purpose, and that we have no right to sell it for any other purpose. Now those people, believing it to be a part of the public domain, have been going upon those lands for the purpose of occupying them and making homes for themselves. The Army of the United States has been employed repeatedly to remove those people. It is but a few weeks ago that the saddest thing to every American heart that could possibly occur—a conflict of arms between the Army of the United States and citizens of the United States—was imminent, because those citizens believed, whether right or wrong, that they were entitled to carve out homes for themselves upon that portion of the public domain, as they regarded it. This provision simply authorizes the President to negotiate with those Indians regarding any rights they may have in those lands, in order that they may be lawfully opened to settlement. It is well known by everybody who reads the public prints that large numbers of our citizens are about to enter that Territory under the impression that they have the right to do so.

The Army of the United States is stationed there to prevent them. A conflict is imminent in the near future unless something be done to avert it. All this is admitted by the Senate and by the conferees of the Senate, but they say that legislation upon an appropriation bill is prohibited by the rules of the Senate, and that therefore they can not give this consideration. There are some other provisions to which they objected, and they suggested some amendments which the conferees on the part of the House readily acceded to. Now, we have to confront these facts and to act upon them by our votes, and so far as I am concerned I shall regard the action of the House as an instruction on these propositions, and I shall obey that instruction, whatever it may be.

With regard to legislation upon appropriation bills, I agree that as a rule it is wrong, but, under our system of rules, it seems indispensable occasionally to insert legislation in these appropriation bills. It is the fault of our system. It results from the fact that we have a system of rules relating to appropriations and to the Committee on Appropriations which clothe that committee with a power which I believe ought not to exist with any committee of this body. It is no answer to say that that power has not been exerted to the prejudice of the public interests. It is enough to know that it is possible that it may be. If I had anything to suggest in regard to this matter after four years' experience upon the Committee on Appropriations, it would be such a reform of the rules as would prevent that committee from reporting a bill to this House with any general legislation whatever in it, and I would add a rule to the same effect for the government of the House itself. Further, I would require the Committee on Appropriations to report the appropriation bills to the House within a reasonable time, so that they might receive fair and due consideration here by the Representatives of the people, and might then be sent to the other branch of the law-making power in time to receive fair and due consideration there. This would force the House to make rules to facilitate general legislation in an orderly way, instead of trying, as is done now, to put all such legislation on appropriation bills.

I want to add another thing before I yield the floor. It is this: Although we have a rule of the House authorizing legislation upon an appropriation bill, the practice has been that where one House puts upon such a bill legislation that is objectionable to the other, the House where such legislation originates surrenders it. Mr. Speaker, having made this statement with no other purpose than to impart to the House the facts so that we may vote intelligently, I now move, unless somebody else cares to talk—

Mr. BUDD. I would like to be heard on this question.

Mr. PETERS. I would like ten minutes.

Mr. RYAN. Very well; I believe the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] was general.

Mr. ELLIS. It was general.

Mr. RYAN. Suppose you withdraw it and let us have a specific motion.

Mr. ELLIS. I withdraw it for that purpose. It was merely formal, at any rate.

Mr. RYAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to test the judgment of the House in regard to these claims, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to amendment numbered 9.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the amendment,

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] to the fact that amendments numbered 9, 12, 13, 14, 26, 35, 41, and 42 relate to claims against Indian tribes, and appropriate money to pay them out of the annuities due to the Indians. Now, why not make the motion apply to all those amendments?

Mr. RYAN. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, and will make the motion apply to all those claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, for the purpose of testing the sense of the House, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to these amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No separate vote is demanded. Is there unanimous consent? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, all of these are claims against Indian tribes, and the money is to be paid out of the Indian annuities.

This list comprises a very small portion of the whole of these claims which have been certified from time to time to Congress from the Indian Bureau. I think these claims ought all to be considered together. Congress before authorizing payment should be better informed as to the character of the claims. The Indians are here insisting that a great many of these are not just and valid claims against them. The Senate maintains that the provisions for the payment of these claims are legislation upon an appropriation bill, and do not properly belong to such a bill. I therefore think that at this late hour of the session it is the part of wisdom for the House to recede from its disagreement and concur in the action of the Senate striking out the provisions for these claims.

Mr. PERKINS. Was there not an Indian depredation claim included in the sundry civil appropriation bill—a claim which has come to Congress within a month or two; and has not the Senate permitted that provision to remain in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Whether it has been permitted to remain I have not examined. But the fact is there is such a depredation claim on that bill, amounting, I think, to $47,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is, however, a very peculiar case. A contractor for furnishing supplies to the Indians had sustained heavy losses by Indian depredations, amounting, as he claimed, to $62,000, or, as found by the Indian Department, $47,000. The fact that this man was a contractor, and according to representations made to the Committee on Appropriations and to the Indian Bureau could not carry out his contract unless the Government promptly paid back to him out of the Indian funds the losses he had sustained, was the motive that induced the action of the Committee on Appropriations.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Cox, of New York). The Chair will state the pending proposition, that debate may be relevant to the question. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] moves that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments in regard to depredation claims. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moves that the House recede from its disagreement to those amendments, the numbers of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

9, 12, 13, 14, 26, 35, 41, 42, 75, 76.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I trust the House will not insist upon having these claims remain in this bill. It has been stated here that claims of this character have for the last four years been placed upon Indian appropriation bills. It has likewise been stated that at different times the Senate has seen fit to put claims of this class upon the Indian appropriation bill. But, Mr. Speaker, the House desires to do what is right in reference to this matter. If heretofore the House has taken hasty action in violation of its rules, if in the past the Senate has taken hasty action in violation of sound and wise legislation, those precedents do not bind our judgment, and should not restrain us from doing at this time what is right.

It will be conceded that under the rules of this House claims belong to the Committee on Claims, and when reported from that committee must take their place upon the Calendar; that the appropriation bills provide money for the current expenses of the Government and do not include claims except a single class. Judgments are placed on the sundry civil bill; they do not go to the Committee on Claims, for they are based upon matters which have been judiciously examined, the Government having been concluded by that examination. So likewise in reference to claims which have been examined under the law by the auditors and comptrollers on behalf of the Government, the two classes of officers being a check upon each other. But in reference to claims for Indian depredations there is no provision of law which submits them to an auditor or comptroller for examination. They are casually examined in the Indian Department, are sent to this House, and should then properly go to the Committee on Claims or sometimes to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

If there is any class of claims that ought not to be placed on appropriation bills it is those against Indians. If there are any claims as to which we ought to be on our guard, ought to have our suspicions excited, it is claims against those ignorant savages. I think the Senate has rightfully refused to allow this class of claims to be placed on this bill. I care not what mistakes the Senate or the House may have made heretofore, wise legislation requires that we should exclude from appropriation bills claims in general, and especially this particular class of claims.

I remember that in the Forty-fourth Congress, when I first examined this matter, claims against the Indians came in and were referred to the Committee on Claims. I found they had not been examined as other claims usually were. The Committee on Appropriations refused to consider these claims at all; and the House declined to put them upon an appropriation bill. We may have been in error; but such was the practice; and I find now no argument for placing these claims on this bill, except the fact that the Senate did it at a given time, or that we have done it for one, two, or three years. I trust that we shall concur in the amendments of the Senate striking out these claims, especially in view of the fact that we are just approaching the adjournment of a Congress. I move concurrence in the amendments of the Senate relating to these claims.

Mr. RYAN. I yield ten minutes to my friend from California [Mr. BUDD].

Mr. BUDD. Mr. Speaker, the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is to recede from the position taken by the House conferees and, in effect, to indorse the action of the Senate in striking from the House bill certain allowed and approved claims for Indian depredations. I desire to state that having investigated this matter somewhat fully by reason of my constituents being especially interested, I have found this is one of the few occasions in which this House has incorporated in the appropriation bill any depredation claims. I find that it has been the custom of the Senate of the United States to put innumerable depredation claims upon the Indian appropriation bills, and it has waited until this time before it ever found a flaw in that mode of procedure or any cause of complaint. I find by looking at the RECORD of last year that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who is now so quick to ask us to recede from our position, consented to the Senate tacking on many such claims and never made even the faintest protest. He did not even bring the matter to the attention of the House. At that time in conference, without instruction or advice from this body, the many Senate claims were agreed to; and now, when we learn from the RECORD that the Senate conferees in discussion, on the 14th of February, say they have examined these claims which the House placed on the bill and they have found them correct, and that their only objection to them was because of a little ruling of the Senate that legislation ought not to go on an appropriation bill—

Mr. LONG. Is not that rule general legislation?

Mr. BUDD. Yes; general legislation.

Mr. LONG. Is this general legislation?

Mr. BUDD. It is not general legislation; it is special, and in furtherance of the present law.

Mr. LONG. Then why is this obnoxious to the Senate rule?

Mr. BUDD. Simply because the Senate did not originate them, I presume.

Mr. LONG. Then I understand that is not the ground on which they object to them.

Mr. BUDD. Upon what ground do they object to them?

Mr. RYAN. I stated to the House, and I had hoped the gentleman had heard me.

Mr. BUDD. I did.

Mr. RYAN. The Senate conferees objected on the ground they had not time to examine these claims.

Mr. BUDD. Very good.

Mr. RYAN. And on the further ground that members of the Senate, representing claims from other parts of the country, insisted if these claims went into the bill those other claims must also go into the bill.

Mr. BUDD. I find by examining the record of this discussion in the Senate of the United States that the Senate committees have made a careful examination of several of these claims, and especially of claim of J. W. Hogan, of Stockton, struck out by amendment 35, and that two of the Senators who are now conferees on the part of the Senate, Senator DAWES and Senator PLUMB, both stated that from an examination of that claim they believed it was just and ought to be paid. That is claim 35. Gentlemen will find the statement of Senator PLUMB on page 1852 of the RECORD, and that of Senator DAWES on page 1857, this session.

Last year the Senate did not care whether or not the House had time to examine the claims, for it tacked on many of them and we concurred, but now when the House asks that a few of its citizens who have been long waiting for their dues shall be paid a sum aggregating only $40,000, the Senate of the United States says it will not pay our own needy citizens their just dues; yet on page 54 of this very bill it tacks on two pieces of new legislation, and provides for paying to Indians who have no funds or claims $50,000. In other words, they inject new legislation into the bill in favor of Indians, and take out legislation carrying out existing law, simply because it recognizes a claim of a citizen against this Government.

Mr. Speaker, the history of the law on this subject is short. In 1834, by act of Congress, the United States guaranteed the payment from the general Treasury of all claims of its citizens for Indian depredations. In 1859 it guaranteed the payment from any Indian annuities that might be granted for the depredations of Indians. Every treaty entered into has a clause in it whereby the claim for a depredation is to be paid out of the annuities granted. Prior to 1870 these claims were presented to and proved in the Interior Department. They were then paid. In 1870 this law was so changed as to require a special appropriation in each case after the claim had been allowed. In the Hogan claim every requirement of law has been complied with. There is a requirement of a full and complete examination by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

It then goes to the Secretary of the Interior. It is passed upon by him and reported to Congress. Then under the law of the United States Congress is by special appropriation to provide for the payment of its own citizens for damages done by Indians out of the money which belongs to the Indians themselves.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] favoring this motion says we ought to see right and justice done. Let me ask where is there greater right or justice than paying a claim like this after it has been allowed as by law required. If under the law a white man injures an Indian the law allows the Indian double damages. If under the law an Indian injures a white man the law says come to the Government, prove your claim, and it shall be paid. Here is a man by the name of J. M. Hogan, of my own town, who, twenty-odd years ago, was robbed of $30,000 worth of property by Indians, and who has been knocking for a quarter of a century at the doors of the Treasury for the payment of his just claim. It has been allowed for only $6,600, though the evidence shows his loss to have been the full amount alleged. It has been examined, approved, reported upon, passed unanimously by this House, and put into this bill and sent to the Senate, and Senator DAWES and Senator PLUMB, both of whom examined it, say that it is a just claim, and one that ought to be paid, which said matter was fully and clearly proved to them by Senator MILLER, of California, who, thank goodness, wishes to see justice done to all these claimants, and has worked hard to that end.

I ask the House then, in view of these facts, to vote down the motion of Judge HOLMAN to recede; to ask these people to see that our own citizens are treated with at least one-tenth part of the justice that is shown to the Indians throughout this country. Six millions of dollars for the Indians; $40,000 refused for just claims of our own citizens; a fine contrast.

Mr. RYAN. I will yield now one minute to my colleague on the committee, Judge HOLMAN.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California refers to the fact that the last Indian appropriation bill contained some thirty-two claims of this character, which were placed upon it by the action of the Senate. That is all very true, and I supposed the House itself and all gentlemen knew of the fact that these claims were on that last bill. There was no discussion on the subject whatever.

The facts presented now, however, with reference to the present bill are entirely different. Senators claim that they have not had time to examine the claims which the House has placed upon the bill, and can not concur in the adoption of the same until they have had an opportunity of advising themselves whether they are proper claims to be placed upon the bill or not. We are in the closing hours of the session. We have got to get together in some way; and in my judgment, if any vote is proper to bring the two Houses together, it is one involving a question submitted in a case of this character, where there has not been time for the other branch of Congress to make the proper investigation of the subject. I think for that reason it would be the part of wisdom for the House to recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate in this respect.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to set the House right as to the law covering this case. The point is made by my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that these claims have no business on an appropriation bill of this kind. Now this bill is one which makes an appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for the fulfillment of treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes. That is the title of the bill itself. Claims of this character, it must be known to the House, do not take the course prescribed for other claims, which go through the routine and examination of the accounting officers of the Treasury. These come under a different heading, and are subjected to a different examination.

The first is a general law providing for the ascertainment of claims, which are audited by the accounting officers of the Department and transmitted to Congress for settlement, but the special law governing the payment of these Indian depredation claims expressly provides for their payment, under the treaty stipulations, out of the tribal funds. I turn to the book of treaties before me at random, and will read a sample of the law, which is substantially universal in its application to all these treaties. I will read from a treaty made with the Navajo Indians:

If bad men among the Indians shall commit a wrong or depredation upon the person or property of any one, white, black, or Indian, subject to the authority of the United States and at peace therewith, the Navajos agree that they will, on proof made to their agent and on notice by him, deliver up the wrongdoer to the United States, to be tried and punished according to its laws, and in case they willfully refuse so to do the person injured shall be reimbursed for his loss from the annuities or other moneys due or to become due to them under this treaty or any others that may be made with the United States; and the President may prescribe such rules and regulations for ascertaining damages under this article as in his judgment may be proper; but no such damage shall be adjusted and paid until examined and passed upon by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and no one sustaining loss while violating or because of his violating the provisions of this treaty or the laws of the United States shall be reimbursed therefor.

So I turn to the treaty with the Arapahoes and the Cheyenne Indians, and I find a similar provision. The same stipulation is placed in all these treaties. You will find the same provision throughout all our dealings with them, that their tribal fund shall be held responsible for depredations committed by them; and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is constituted the judge. Everybody, I presume, is familiar with the principle of law that when Congress has constituted a person or organization as the sole judge of a matter his judgment upon that subject is final. These claims go through that constituted tribunal.

The Committee on Indian Affairs, taking this view of the law, and in view of the fact of this consecrated practice to put claims year after year carrying out treaty stipulations by providing the money for their payment out of the tribal fund of the Indians on the part of the Senate of the United States, concluded to see if it would not be proper to do a little of that business themselves; and so in pursuance of that idea they put on these claims, which they hope will act as a check on further depredations of this character by letting the Indians know that their tribal funds will be held rigidly responsible for any mischiefs perpetrated by them.

Now, my friend from Indiana [Judge HOLMAN] alludes to the case of this contractor who could not carry out the provisions of his contract unless he was reimbursed from the tribal fund. But, sir, that is a mild, a very mild, case compared with claims presented here. Settlers' houses burned, their children murdered by their fireside, their stock killed, their fences destroyed, all they have on the face of the earth going to destruction in an hour beneath the mad wave of the savage barbarism of these people. These cases have been picked out here and put into this bill; cases of spoliation, murder, arson, the very worst that we could find; and they have not only been examined by the constituted authorities under these treaty stipulations with the Indians, but by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs himself, and they have been examined and recommended by the committee of the House.

Mr. RYAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD].

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express my profound gratitude to the gentleman from the State of Kansas who constitutes one of the peerage of the immortals that compose the Committee on Appropriations for according to me five minutes' time.

I have heard gentlemen here speaking with reference to these Indian depredations who have not seen an Indian in their lives and know nothing about the dangers that you, sir [Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair], and myself encountered years ago when riding on a stage-coach over the plains and through the mountains and looking with an anxious eye when we came to a curve to see whether the noble red man was not there with his rifle in his hand. Do you recollect it? [Laughter.]

The policy of this Government is simply that an Indian can plunder and rob you day after day, and if a white man insists upon his rights he can not get a single dollar by way of compensation for the injuries he has received. You know as well as I know that year after year we appropriate millions of dollars to support these Indians, not as paupers, but as the great wards of the nation. I say that an Indian, like a white man, should starve if he will not work. God made this country for men who labor and toil and struggle, and not for the sluggards that will neither work by day nor by night. And yet according to the policy of this Congress you allow them to burn houses, and steal horses, and kill people, and when those who have suffered at their hands come forward with a bill to compensate them for the injury they have experienced you say, "Oh, no; in the love of God and humanity we will not do this." [Laughter.]

What have you Eastern people been doing since the settlement of the Republic? You drove the Indians from New England because they were not a type of the survival of the fittest. You drove them from Pennsylvania. You drove them from Indiana. You drove them across the Mississippi River. You carried them at the ends of the tails of horses from Georgia into the Indian Territory; and there you gave them an acreage larger in extent than the State of Indiana; and there are but 15,000 of them there. Can not we get a little sense on this Indian question?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RYAN. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. STEVENS] except one minute, which I reserve.

Mr. STEVENS. It is not my intention to detain the House long with any remarks on this bill. The experience of the House to-day in discussing this question has been but a repetition of the experience of previous years.

I shall come at once to the question before the House, the propriety of insisting upon or receding from the disagreement to the amendments of the Senate. These claims under consideration, or most of them, were under existing law first sent to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and from them after a careful consideration to this House, when they were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Until within a few years authority was given to the Secretary of the Interior to examine the claims and to pay such amount as he thought fit. That legislation was changed, and the Secretary was prohibited from making payment until after Congress had authorized it.

The great bulk of the claims in this bill were in the early part of last session submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and by the chairman of that committee were referred to various subcommittees. The members of those committees gave the various claims most careful consideration. They were the subject of much discussion in the committee, and in almost every instance the amount allowed by the Indian Department was considerably decreased. Thus decreased they were favorably reported by bill to the House and were placed upon the Private Calendar, and there these claims sleep and will sleep the final sleep, one that knows no waking, because the opinion of this House has apparently come to be settled that everything coming before it in the shape of a claim against the Indians in the shape of depredations contains more or less of a "steal." Prejudice has become so great that in almost every instance these claims year after year have been refused consideration, and, as has been very properly said by gentlemen who have preceded me, these settlers presenting the claims, whose cabins have been burned, whose stock has been driven off and killed, who have been robbed of the pittance which they as settlers on the public lands had gathered together by years of labor, have had no attention paid to them, in defiance of the stipulations of treaties existing between these tribes and the United States that all depredations and spoiliations shall be paid for and taken from their treaty funds.

The Committee on Indian Affairs, in devoting the labor they did to these various Indian claims, were in hope some consideration would be paid thereto by this Congress. But I believe only one has been considered; and the Committee on Appropriations have followed the practice of previous years, when, having had the claims of various citizens brought to them by their Representatives on this floor, they have in the kindness of their heart put this claim and that claim and the other upon the appropriation bills owing to the pressure that was brought to bear upon them by members on the floor of this House; the result being that a few favored claims, without any reference to their real merit, have been paid, and in many instances some most deserving ones have not been paid.

Some criticism was indulged in in the Senate on the action of the Committee on Indian Affairs in this House; and I want to say, Mr. Speaker, in reference to some of the claims placed upon the bill by the Committee on Appropriations that they were never considered in the Committee on Indian Affairs.

And if the amount appropriated by them was wrong, it was not the fault of the Committee on Indian Affairs, because the bills were never considered by that committee. In the last session of this Congress the Senate, as has been stated, saw fit, under the pressure of Senators representing their constituents, to place a large number of these claims on the appropriation bill. The result was that the bills presented to this House and acted upon here received no consideration, and no payments were made for those losses. This year the Committee on Appropriations have been much more generous and liberal. They have placed a large number of these claims upon the bill very properly and very justly; for I believe that if all can not be paid it is better that some should be than none. The Senate, however, thought differently, and because they could not put upon the appropriation bill all that they desired to put there, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] has stated, they cross all these claims off, and are disposed to pay none.

Now a word or two in regard to the consistency of the Senate, and a little something in regard to the consistency of our honorable Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations placed upon the sundry civil bill, as has been stated, a claim of some $46,000 or $47,000. That case was never considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs; no report upon it has ever been made from that committee. I understand, however, that it is a just claim, and I take no exception to the Committee on Appropriations having made provision for its payment, but I want to call attention to the consistency of the Senate. The bill went to the Senate with that provision upon it, and although the Senate had struck from the bill all the appropriations for the payment of these depredation claims, yet no Senator raised his voice to draw attention to this claim, which was of exactly the same character, and the conferees on the part of the House who reported that fact here made no request of the House that it would reject that claim and insist upon its going off with the others.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I only desire to say that I trust this House will insist upon these claims remaining in the bill. So far as I know, and so far as they have been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House, they are just and proper claims, and ought to be paid.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. HOLMAN. In that minute I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that amendment No. 45, on page 47, is an amendment placed there as a substitute for a corresponding provision which was originally contained in the bill. It appropriates the sum of $10,000, to be used by the Secretary of the Interior in making a general examination, classification, and index of these claims, for transmission to Congress, not simply claims here included, but all these claims, amounting to millions of dollars.

It will be seen, therefore, that there is a general provision in this bill looking to the settlement of all these claims. I wish to call attention also to the fact that that amendment has been concurred in. One other word, which is all I feel at liberty to say: I admonish gentlemen on the floor of the House that on account of the condition of the appropriation bills the enrollment of them in time is going to be the greatest embarrassment in the way of the adjournment of Congress at 12 o'clock on the 4th of March. At the earliest moment these bills must go to the clerks for enrollment if they are to be ready in time. I now call the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] to have modified his motion so as to make it a motion to recede?

Mr. RYAN. No, sir; I made the motion to insist. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] made the motion to recede.

Mr. ELLIS. To recede and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On that motion the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has called the previous question. Is there a second?

There was a second, and the previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendments numbered 9, 12, 13, 14, 26, 35, 41, 42, 75, and 76, and on a vice voce vote the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

A division was called for; and there were—ayes 87, noes 41.

Mr. BUDD. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum is made, and the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and the gentleman from California, Mr. BUDD, to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 111, noes 54.

So the motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS. I now move that the House further insist upon its disagreements to the amendments numbered 27, 28, 110, 111, 112, and 113. These amendments embrace the remaining points of difference between the two Houses.

Mr. RYAN. Those relate to legislation to which I have adverted. The motion of Mr. ELLIS was agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS. I now move that the House ask a further conference with the Senate on the remaining differences between the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. COX, of New York] announced the appointment of Mr. ELLIS, Mr. HOLMAN, and Mr. RYAN as conferees on the part of the House.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HANCOCK. I submit the conference report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7785) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, and agree to the same.

JOHN HANCOCK,
JOHN F. FOLLETT,
W. D. WASHBURN,
Managers on the part of the House.
W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
WILKINSON CALL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following statement, accompanying the conference report, was read:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7785) making appropriations for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year 1886, submit the following in explanation of the action of the conference committee as submitted in the accompanying report:

The bill agreed upon in conference appropriates $60,000,000 and is in exact terms as amended by the Senate.

JOHN HANCOCK,
JOHN F. FOLLETT,
W. D. WASHBURN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HANCOCK. I move that the report be adopted.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I move to non-concur.
The SPEAKER. The report of the committee of conference must either be agreed to or disagreed to as an entirety. If the House should refuse to agree to the report, it would then be in order to take up the amendments of the Senate for such action as the House might think proper. But the report is treated as an entire proposition.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Is it in order to move to disagree to the report?

The SPEAKER. If the motion to adopt the report be defeated, that action would be equivalent to disagreement; and then it would be in order to move that the House recede from its disagreement to any or all of the amendments or to make any other parliamentary motion.

Mr. HANCOCK. Upon my motion to adopt the report I move the previous question.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I want to make a single statement, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] will permit me.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas permit the gentleman from Arkansas to make a statement?

Mr. HANCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I wish to say but a word. My idea was, if this motion should be voted down, to offer the pension-attorney fee-bill as an amendment to one of the amendments of the Senate. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. That is all I have to say.

The previous question was ordered.

The question recurred on the adoption of the report of the conference committee.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 19.

So the report was adopted.

Mr. HANCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that all the motions which under the rules of the House can be pending at the same time in relation to recess are now pending, and these motions must be withdrawn or it must be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent then that the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

A MEMBER. Say 8 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am quite confident the House can not with any safety go beyond half past 7.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is all right. If we have a recess until half past 7 it will give us an opportunity to get our dinners.

Mr. HOLMAN. We are expecting a bill in the House upon which action must be had.

Mr. HEPBURN. If unanimous consent be given, I understand the motion now pending will retain its status.

The SPEAKER. Not unless that be the understanding.

Mr. HEPBURN. We want that understanding.

Mr. COOK. If that is the understanding, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks if the House takes a recess to a different time than that proposed by the motions pending, then those motions would fall.

Mr. HOLMAN. Those motions can be renewed at any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the House shall now take a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

RANGE AND RANCH CATTLE BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting additional report in regard to range and ranch cattle business in the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WAIT, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for this evening, on account of important business.

CLEPHANE & BOSWELL.

On motion of Mr. HAMMOND, by unanimous consent leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the claim of Clephane & Boswell, stenographers, for services in reporting the case of Kilbourn vs. Thompson, leaving no certified copies.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print remarks in the RECORD on the general subject of public lands in connection with the various bills upon that subject.

W. W. WIGGINS.

On motion of W. JONES, of Wisconsin, by unanimous consent leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of W. W. Wiggins for increase of pension, there being no adverse report, without leaving certified copies.

HENRY MULLEN.

On motion of Mr. A. HERR SMITH, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Henry Mullen (H. R. 4983, favorable report 357), without leaving certified copies.

W. H. PLUNKET.

On motion of Mr. FINDLAY, by unanimous consent leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of W. H. Plunket, no adverse report having been made in the House, as he has been informed and believes, without leaving copies.

VINCENT T. DONNELLY.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Vincent T. Donnelly, executrix of the late Col. Peter Lyle, no adverse report having been made thereon, without leaving certified copies.

MRS. PHEBE W. ROSS.

On motion of Mr. O'HARA, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Mrs. Phebe W. Ross, of Wilmington, N. C., no adverse report having been made thereon, without leaving certified copies.

And then (at 5 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past 7 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) resumed its session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move that the House take a recess for one hour.
Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I move that the recess be taken until 12 o'clock.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that will not be done. The Committee on Appropriations expect to come in with some reports presently.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. That would be an adjournment.

Mr. BRUMM. I move to amend the motion by taking a recess until 10 o'clock to-night.

Mr. SPRINGER. When all gentlemen have submitted their various motions for a recess it will afford me great pleasure to state that no recess will be taken at all. [Laughter and cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM], that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock, being an amendment to an amendment, is first in order.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 6, noes 21.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers, and Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. KLEINER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 9, noes 35.

Mr. ANDERSON. No quorum.

FRENCH SPOILIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution, the purport of which is to cause the removal of certain papers now on the files of the House to the State Department. These are papers connected with the French spoliation claims, and the object of the resolution is to have them removed to the State Department, to be kept there, together with other papers pertaining to that subject, in accordance with the terms of the French spoliation act recently passed by Congress, which requires that all of these papers abroad shall be delivered at the State Department and filed with those already there and such others as may be put on file. There are a number of papers relating to these claims upon our files, and I suppose there will be no objection to this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to take from the files of the House all papers relating to the French spoliation claims and deliver the same to the Secretary of State to be filed in the State Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. If it does not interfere with the pending motions—

The SPEAKER. It will not interfere with any pending motion.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Then I have no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a private pension bill, being a House bill with Senate amendments, with a view to concurring in those amendments.

Mr. ANDERSON. All right.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Let us hear what it is.

Mr. BAGLEY. I refer to House bill 3467—

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3467) granting a pension to H. D. Pryor.

Mr. BAGLEY. There are certain Senate amendments to this bill, to the text of the bill and to the title, and I ask that they be read with a view to concurring in them.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Senate amendments will be read.

The Senate amendments were read ~~length~~.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I should like to have some explanation from the gentleman who calls this bill up as to the effect of the bill before unanimous consent is given to its consideration.

Mr. HAMMOND. The easiest way to dispose of the matter is to make objection.

Mr. BAGLEY. Let me make a brief statement, and I am satisfied the gentleman will not insist upon his objection. This bill is intended to relieve the hardships imposed upon four or five widows under a misconstruction of the law by the Commissioner of Pensions. Their pensions were reduced under this decision $5 a month; and this is to restore them to their rightful amount, and that is all there is of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HAMMOND. I object.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to make a request and a very brief statement, which will not occupy more than a minute, in relation to a subject of personal interest to myself and in which I believe the House will feel an interest.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [Cries of "All right!"]

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have stood and sat here for a very long time watching and waiting to get an opportunity to make a personal appeal to the House by saying a word in behalf of an exceedingly worthy object. We introduced in this House a bill granting a pension to Mrs. Septimia Randolph Meikleham, the only surviving granddaughter of Thomas Jefferson, which proposed to give her $2,500 a year. Opposition was made, however, to the passage of that bill on the ground that it was establishing a precedent for making a special or civil pension list. I immediately afterward, on the 17th of last March, introduced a bill making her a donation, and all those who objected at that time to the bill, I understand, state now they will withdraw their objection to it. I introduced a bill, as I have said, which proposes to give her $50,000 as a donation.

If you give her back the Declaration written by her grandfather I can get more than a hundred thousand dollars for it. I have seen those likely to oppose it, and they tell me that if I reduce the amount one-half they will not object. I now appeal to the House as the last word I may ever say in this city of Washington that this bill be taken up. It will not take two minutes, and I propose that we pass it and send it at once to the Senate. She is sick; her daughter is sick; one death has recently occurred in the family, and she is 71 years of age. The last request I make here is for your own honor and the glory of the country to permit me to introduce this bill and have it passed now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ROBINSON] asks unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. HAMMOND. I object.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York. I beg the gentleman to withdraw his objection. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

PRINTING OF TREATIES AND CONVENTIONS.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. That is the regular order.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back the Senate concurrent resolution which I send to the desk and to move concurrence in the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed 9,500 additional copies of the treaties and conventions transmitted to the Senate by the President in his message of January 23, 1885, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House, 4,000 copies for the use of the Department of State, and 1,000 copies for distribution by the Interior Department among public libraries not depositories under existing law; each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress to designate two libraries to which copies of the work shall be thus sent. And the Public Printer is also authorized to print and have bound 2,000 additional copies to be sold at actual cost and 10 per cent. added.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I move concurrence.

The resolution was concurred in.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VISITORS TO UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following members as Visitors to the United States Military Academy: Mr. R. Q. MILLS of Texas, Mr. J. H. BLOUNT of Georgia, and Mr. WILLIAM D. KELLEY of Pennsylvania.

VISITORS TO UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following members as Visitors to the United States Naval Academy: Mr. JOHN G. BALLENTINE of Tennessee, Mr. BENJAMIN LE FEVRE of Ohio, and Mr. JOHN R. THOMAS of Illinois.

TRUSTEES OF COLUMBIA HOSPITAL.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following members as trustees of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum: Mr. GEORGE D. WISE of Virginia and Mr. L. E. MCCOMAS of Maryland.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS.

The SPEAKER also announced the following appointments on committees:

Mr. B. F. SHIVELY, of Indiana, in place of Mr. Charles Shelley, on Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. JAMES W. REID, of North Carolina, on Committee on Levees and Improvements of Mississippi River.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SUMNER, of California, and Mr. ROWELL addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Is the demand for the regular order withdrawn?

Mr. ROWELL. I ask unanimous consent to say a word. I desire to make a very brief statement in regard to the bill which I hold in my hand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to make a brief statement in regard to a bill which he desires to call up. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNETT. I object.

Mr. ROWELL. The interests of the constituents of the gentleman who makes the objection are represented in this bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. COSGROVE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration a Senate bill for the relief of S. W. Marston, formerly Indian agent at Union agency, in the Indian Territory. I believe no gentleman will object to this bill when it is understood.

The SPEAKER. Is the demand for the regular order withdrawn?

Mr. COSGROVE. I think the demand for the regular order is not insisted on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has twice asked the question whether the demand for the regular order is withdrawn and it was not withdrawn.

Mr. COSGROVE. I ask unanimous consent; and if objection is not made, I hope the Speaker will give me recognition for the purpose I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COSGROVE] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill which he has indicated.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that when there is a demand for the regular order and it is not withdrawn, it is useless for the Chair to recognize gentlemen to ask unanimous consent. It only imposes additional labor on the Official Reporters of the House, and, of course, amounts to nothing, because the Chair can not under the rule entertain a request for unanimous consent when the regular order is insisted on.

Mr. COSGROVE. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ADAMS] withdraws his objection.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. On the statement of the case presented to me by my genial friend from Missouri [Mr. COSGROVE] I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asked unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill indicated to which the gentleman from New York objected. The gentleman from New York now withdraws his objection. If there be no further objection—

Mr. PAYSON. The title of the bill has not yet been read. Let it be read subject to objection.

Mr. COSGROVE. It is Senate bill No. 1035, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle the claim of S. W. Marston, late United States agent at Union agency, Indian Territory, for services and expenses.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRUMM. I object; but I would like to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. BRUMM. If gentlemen will give us a chance to do what they agreed to last night I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a question of order. It is impossible in the confusion even to hear what the Speaker says.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suspend all business until order is restored on the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to make a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Architect of the Capitol be, and he is hereby, directed to transfer from the Senate wing of the Capitol the life-size portrait of Henry Clay (by John Neagle, 1843) and place it on one of the walls within the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. On what ground does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] claim that this is a privileged matter?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I claim that it is privileged because this picture is part of the property of the House of Representatives, and has been transferred from the House wing to the Senate wing of the Capitol, and I think that if possible it should be brought back to the House.

The SPEAKER. But under what rule of the House does the gentleman claim that this resolution is privileged? It does not come within the definition of any privileged question defined in any rule of the House. It is true, as the Chair thinks, that the picture to which the resolution refers is the property of the House. It is also true, as the Chair is advised, that the Architect of the Capitol will return it here whenever there is a suitable place provided for its preservation.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. There is so much noise that it is impossible to hear distinctly what the Chair has decided.

The SPEAKER. There has been no refusal on the part of any officer to return to the House of Representatives the picture to which the gentleman's resolution refers.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I understand that, Mr. Speaker, but that picture, which is a magnificent portrait of the greatest orator this country has ever produced, is now in the lobby of the second floor of the Senate wing of the Capitol. It is a very large portrait with a very large frame, and I have been making measurements to ascertain whether it could be put anywhere upon the walls. I think it can, and I think it should be brought back and placed here. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the Library and the Architect of the Capitol have control over all such matters. The regular order is demanded, and the tellers are still taking the vote.

Mr. COSGROVE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman who objected a while ago to the bill which I proposed to call up withdraws his objection.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded by two or three gentlemen.

The tellers reported the vote on the pending motion as ayes 10, noes 75.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum voting.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I move a call of the House.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. MILLER; and there were—ayes 31, noes 59.

Mr. WELLER. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays, and 40 members (more than one-fifth of the last vote) voting in the affirmative, the yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that my friend the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. ANDERSON, be excused from voting on this roll-call.

The House divided on the motion of Mr. DUNHAM; and there were—ayes 17, noes 30.

Mr. DUNHAM. No quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. No quorum is necessary to decide any question incident to a call of the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COSGROVE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] is excused, will it be competent for him to remain in the House and participate in its proceedings after he is excused?

The SPEAKER. Certainly. This is merely a motion to excuse him from voting on this question.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask whether in this House of Representatives, composed of 325 members, with a Democratic majority of 78, one man can impose upon us the hardship of all this tediousness? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. DUNHAM; and there were—ayes 40, nays 154, not voting 129; as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. CONVERSE with Mr. RICE, on this vote.

Mr. MILLS with Mr. STUBBLE, for the rest of the day.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

RECALL OF A BILL FROM THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks unanimous consent that an order be entered requesting the Senate to return to the House the Post-Office appropriation bill with the amendments on which the two Houses have disagreed. There was a slight error in the message communicating the action of the House to the Senate; and this error ought to be corrected as early as possible. If there be no objection, a request for the return of the bill will be sent to the Senate.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CRUISE OF REVENUE-STEAMER CORWIN.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I rose to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order a call. But I am willing to withhold the motion till the gentleman from New York has made his report.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered. It is a privileged motion.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies of the report of Capt. M. A. Healey, United States Revenue Marine, upon the cruise of the revenue-steamer Corwin in the Arctic Ocean in the year 1884, and its accompanying documents and illustrations, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House, and 2,000 for the use of the Treasury Department.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] has moved to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order a call.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

MRS. ANN E. GRIDLEY.

On motion of Mr. ELDREDGE, by unanimous consent leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Mrs. Ann E. Gridley, without leaving copies.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS WITH GERMAN EMPIRE.

Mr. EATON. I ask unanimous consent to present a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which will take but little time of the House, while it is of interest to all the productive industries of the country. I ask the House to hear it read.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. We have no objection, provided the motions will be considered as pending.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent to introduce a measure for consideration does not interfere except for the time being with the motions pending. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred House resolution relative to duties by the German Empire alleged to be discriminating against the products of the United States, report:

That having had the resolution under consideration, your committee is of the opinion that the action of the German authorities has been unfavorable to the introduction into the German Empire of several of the products of the United States, to wit: pork, wheat, rye, and particularly petroleum.

Your committee therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the President of the United States be requested to take immediate steps to secure to the United States equal benefits in the German Empire with other nations as to all articles of commerce of the United States under the most-favored-nation clause of the treaty of 1828 made with Prussia, and now in force between the United States and the German Empire.

Mr. EATON. I ask for the passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX, of New York. I object. It is not anything but retaliation, which is never wise.

Mr. KEAN. I demand the regular order of business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 36.

Mr. KEAN. No quorum.

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were ayes 45.

The SPEAKER. A sufficient number.

Several MEMBERS. Count the other side.

The other side was counted, and there were 32 in the negative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and the question was decided in the affirmative—yeas 151, nays 55, not voting 117; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

During the roll-call, a message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the return, in compliance with the request of the House, of a bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

It further announced the passage of bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 8183) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Murdaugh, of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. 754) for the relief of Nathan H. Dunphe, of Bridgewater, in the State of Massachusetts; and

A bill (H. R. 8102) to give assent of Congress for the construction of the railroad by the East and Middle Railroad Company over the Cumberland and Coney Fork Rivers.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, will be returned to the Senate with the corrected statement that the House agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 7785) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEPBURN. There are many gentlemen on both sides of the House who have bills they desire to have considered, and I ask by unanimous consent they may be considered under the new rule, until a report from a committee of conference is read, the election case not to lose its present status.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the motion: The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] asks unanimous consent that the Speaker recognize gentlemen for the purpose of calling up bills under the special rule of the House, such recognition to continue until such time as a conference report is received.

Mr. HEPBURN. The election case not to lose its present status.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE].

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 12, noes 41.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers, and Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. KLEINER were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 9, noes 22.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. BELFORD. Pending that I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BELFORD. Our fathers who established this Government had, as the fundamental principle, in view the formation of a government in which a majority should rule; and I desire to know whether one or two members on this floor can keep three hundred and twenty-five members here to-night doing nothing and depriving a member of his seat on this floor at the same time? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] moves a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on division there were—ayes 10, noes 35.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I believe I will call for the yeas and nays on that proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 45, nays 146, not voting 133; as follows:

So a call of the House was not ordered.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

During the roll-call the following proceedings took place:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 653) for the relief of John B. Davis.

Also, that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to interrupt the roll-call to move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the deficiency bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Had not we better concur, so as to wind it up as soon as possible?

Mr. RANDALL. There is no danger about getting through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KLEINER in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The Chair hears none.

Mr. PRICE. I object. [Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. RANDALL. No gentleman rose in his place to object.

Mr. PRICE. I now rise in my place and make objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is too late.

Mr. KEIFER. We had better have order, so that we can know what is going on.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to reconsider the action of the House just taken; and also to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. ANDERSON. What is this question? I would like to know what is going on. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion just submitted.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the roll-call.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, to save time on the deficiency bill, I request a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be acceded to. There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. BURNES, Mr. RANDALL, and Mr. LONG as managers on the part of the House at said conference.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The roll-call was then resumed and concluded as above.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the House consider bills that may be called up by members under the new rule.

The SPEAKER. That request was made a few moments ago and was objected to.

Mr. SHIVELY and Mr. WELLER objected.
The SPEAKER. And is still objected to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 754) for the relief of Nathan H. Dunphe, of Bridgewater, in the State of Massachusetts.

PRINTING OF REPORT ON NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 347) to provide for the printing of additional copies of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs to the House of Representatives on the investigation of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

Resolved, &c., That in addition to the authorized number, 5,000 copies of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs on the investigation of the National Home for Disabled Volunteers be printed, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COSGROVE. I have asked unanimous consent to call up for consideration bill S. 1035. The gentleman who made the objection will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Several gentlemen made objection.

Mr. COSGROVE. I have seen, I think, all of them, and understand that they now withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit the request. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill S. 1035, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1035) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle the claims of S. W. Marston, late United States Indian agent at Union agency, Indian Territory, for services and expenses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUMM. I object.

Mr. COSGROVE. Is it in order to ask a suspension of the rules to pass that bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not. There are motions pending before the House undisposed of.

Mr. WELLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this joint resolution which I send to the desk. I ask that it be read.

Mr. PETERS. I object.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to importune the gentleman who has offered an objection that he withdraw it that the resolution may be read for the information of the House.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I object.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that a recess be taken for fifteen minutes.

Mr. HUTCHINS and Mr. ANDERSON objected.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the present status of the motions is maintained I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair has already announced that if a recess is taken to a different time from that mentioned in the pending motions they will fall unless there be an agreement to the contrary.

Mr. ANDERSON. That was my understanding, and that is the reason why I objected.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until half past 11 o'clock.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to inquire whether under the operation of the rules of this House a contested-election case involving the right of a member to a seat on this floor can be considered, and whether a few gentlemen can obstruct the consideration of that right recognized by the laws and the Constitution.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes; they can do it.

Mr. BELFORD. I insist on a decision of that question whether two or three men in this House can deprive a member of his right to sit here and overcome the majority of the Representatives of the people.

The SPEAKER. The majority will govern under the rules of the House whenever a vote can be obtained under the rules of the House.

Mr. BELFORD. Now, was it not the intention— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BELFORD. This is the regular order. Was it not the intention of the fathers of this Republic that the majority should govern?

PRINTING REPORTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ROGERS], chairman of the Committee on Printing, asks unanimous consent to present a report.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 114) to provide for printing the annual reports of the Smithsonian Institution.

Resolved, etc., That the annual reports of the Smithsonian Institution shall be hereafter printed at the Government Printing Office in the same manner as the annual reports of the heads of Departments are now printed for submission in print to the two Houses of Congress.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HISTORY OF THE RED CROSS.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I also ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Printing for present consideration the Senate concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 copies of the History of the Red Cross from the stereotyped plates now at the Government Printing Office, for the use of the American Association of the Red Cross.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WELLER. Can I now make the request that the joint resolution which I have sought to call up be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. LAMB and others objected.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the joint resolution (S. R. 119) accepting the gift by William H. Vanderbilt and Julia Dent Grant, wife of General Ulysses S. Grant, to the United States of certain articles.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] asks unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the Senate joint resolution No. 119, the title of which he has just stated.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let the matter be stated before objection is made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects.

Mr. BINGHAM. Can not the resolution be read subject to objection?

The SPEAKER. It can not, if objection is made to the reading.

Mr. DUNHAM. May I ask, Mr. Speaker, who it is that objects?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] objects.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1852) to regulate appointments and promotions in the staff of the Marine Corps, and I would like to say a few words by way of explanation. This relates to only two officers of the Marine Corps, both of whom have served over thirty-five years and have won laurels in the field in Mexico.

A MEMBER. Let the bill be read.

Mr. BRUMM. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WELLER. I am informed that there was a confusion of ideas as to whether the matter which I desired to call up was the resolution I hold in my hand or some other, and that the gentleman who objected did so under a misapprehension. [Laughter.] I now desire to renew my request.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. Several gentlemen have objected, and gentlemen are now objecting. That being so, of course the Chair can not entertain a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], when he objected, probably misunderstood the proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO]. May not the joint resolution be read subject to objection?

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded by gentlemen on the left, and the Chair will now state that until the demand for the regular order is withdrawn, the Chair will not recognize any gentleman for a request for unanimous consent, but will proceed with the regular order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. All right, Mr. Speaker. Let us have the regular order and peace.

Mr. WELLER. Will the Chair please state what is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will do so as soon as the House comes to order. [After a pause.] The regular order is the question on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], which is that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock. [After putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair the yeas have it.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I call for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 41.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point is made that no quorum has voted. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERMENROUT].

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. The motion being to take a recess until 10 o'clock to-night, and the hour of 10 o'clock having passed, does not that motion fall?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with that question. That may be a very good reason why the House should not agree to the amendment, but it was in order when offered. As many as are in favor of agreeing to the amendment will pass between the tellers and be counted.

Pending the count the tellers will suspend, in order that the House may receive a message from the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 8279) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments (disagreed to by the House) to the bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for prior years, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. COCKRELL as conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the fortification bill, with the Senate amendments, for the purpose of moving to non-concur in the amendments and asking a conference.

Mr. BUDD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. An inquiry connected with this matter?

Mr. BUDD. Connected with this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUDD. After the conference report is made, will it be in order for a member to require the reading of any amendment and a separate vote on each amendment as reported by the conferees?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order for any member to require the reading of all the amendments, but it will not be in order for a member to demand a separate vote upon the amendments which have been agreed to by the conferees, because a conference report is one entire thing, and must be either adopted or rejected as a whole.

Mr. BUDD. But the amendments that are not agreed to?

The SPEAKER. The amendments that are not agreed to will be disposed of separately by the House. If there be no objection the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (8279) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, will be non-concurred in, and the House will ask a committee of conference.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HANCOCK, Mr. FORNEY, and Mr. WASHBURN.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will resume their places and continue the count.

Pending the count by tellers the following proceedings took place:

Mr. NEECE. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. I have a little bill here to remove the charge of desertion from the record of a young man who entered the Army under 18 years of age. At the battle of Pea Ridge, where he was wounded, he was, owing to that fact, marked improperly as a deserter. Going afterward into another regiment, he was killed in battle. His old father now wishes simply to draw his back pay. This bill has passed the Senate. It is Senate bill 445, for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Robert J. Bangness, deceased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Several members called for the regular order.

PRINTING OF NAVAL AND MILITARY REPORTS.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. On behalf of the Committee on Printing I desire to have taken from the Speaker's table for present consideration the joint resolution (S. R. 100) authorizing the printing of certain naval and military reports. I think when the joint resolution is read there will be no objection to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled. That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 4,500 copies of each of the following reports: The report of Lieut. Commander C. F. Goodrich, United States Navy, on the British naval and military operations in Egypt; the report of Lieut. Fisher M. Wright, United States Navy, on the operations of the French navy during the recent war with Tunis; the report of Lieut. Theodoros B. M. Mason, United States Navy, on the war on the Pacific coast of South America between Chili and the allied Republics of Peru and Bolivia; 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar—

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH, of Missouri). The House is dividing.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask unanimous consent to vacate the order by which the House agreed to take up the contested-election case of Frederick vs. Wilson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is not in order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the fortification appropriation bill, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKBELL.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. In behalf of the Committee on Printing I desire unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table, for concurrence in the amendments of the Senate, the joint resolution (H. Res. 342) to authorize the printing of 400,000 copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1885.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In line 1, strike out "400" and insert "310;" so as to provide for 310,000 copies. In line 3, strike out "300" and insert "200;" and in line 5, strike out "70" and insert "80;" so as to provide 200,000 for the use of the House of Representatives and 80,000 for the use of the Senate.

Amend the title of the joint resolution by striking out "400" and inserting "310."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the amendments of the Senate; which, on motion of Mr. ROGERS, of New York, were concurred in.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. The tellers who have been conducting the count upon the motion for a recess desire to report. They agree in the report which they send to the Clerk's desk.

The result was announced—ayes 26, noes 55.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. It appears that there is no quorum. I move a call of the House.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. A paper published in New York called The Voice, which claims to be a temperance journal, has seen fit to publish the following paragraph about myself:

LEGISLATIVE MEASURES—DO THE WHISKY MEN WANT THE EARTH?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, has introduced a bill into the House of Representatives providing that the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue be abolished and the whole system of internal taxation done away with. This bill is said to have been framed at the instance of the whisky men. Mr. WHITE is the Congressman who recently applied an insulting term to Speaker CARLISLE.

That was sent to me by Mr. R. B. Neal, editor of Good Words, a temperance paper published in Louisville, Ky.; otherwise I would not have seen it. Now, Mr. Speaker, if that came from a source claiming to be an enemy to the cause which I have advocated and maintained I should treat it with the same indifference I have treated hundreds of others of a similar character, but coming as it does from a paper professing the principles of temperance, of which I believe every member on this floor will accord to me that I have been a consistent and persistent advocate ever since I became a Representative in the Forty-fourth Congress and during the Forty-seventh Congress and also during the present Congress, I think it requires some personal notice at my hands.

Now, sir, it is a matter of record that in the Forty-fourth Congress

I introduced a bill into this House for the prohibition by the national Congress of the sale of intoxicating liquors for any other purpose than mechanical, medicinal, or scientific. In the Forty-seventh Congress I introduced the same bill. In the Forty-eighth Congress I introduced a similar bill, slightly modifying it and providing for punishment, which before I had left to the wisdom of the committee. I will send to the Clerk's desk a copy of that bill to be read.

Mr. HENLEY. How long is this matter about being read to last?

Mr. CURTIN. What is it all about?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky rises to a question of personal privilege and is stating his question of privilege to the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 596) to lessen crime and human suffering from alcoholism by restricting the use of distilled spirits to scientific, mechanical, and medicinal purposes.

Whereas the injurious effects from the use as a beverage of intoxicating liquors are universally admitted; and

Whereas spirituous liquors are powerful instruments for evil and corruption in our elections; and

Whereas the unbridled traffic in spirituous liquors promotes contentions, riots, ignorance, and poverty; and

Whereas the iniquity of alcoholism is visited through the parent "upon the third and fourth generations;" and

Whereas the effects of alcoholism are filling our prisons, houses of correction, and institutions of charity with criminals and sufferers, and covering the land with woe and misery: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That on and after the 30th day of June, 1884, no person, except as hereinafter provided, shall manufacture or sell or keep for sale that substance known as ethyl alcohol, hydrated oxide of ethyl, or spirit of wine, or any other intoxicating liquor which can be produced by the fermentation of grain, starch, molasses, or sugar, including all dilutions and mixtures of sugar. No person shall manufacture, sell, or keep for sale as a beverage any intoxicating liquor whatever, including ale, wine, and beer.

SEC. 2. That any person convicted of a willful violation of any of the provisions of the preceding section shall be fined not exceeding $500, or imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That no intoxicating liquors whatever, including ale, wine, and beer, shall be imported into the United States from any foreign port or place. All goods or merchandise imported contrary to this section, and the vessel wherein the same shall be imported, together with her cargo, tackle, apparel, and furniture, shall be forfeited to the United States; and such goods, wares, merchandise, ship or vessel, and cargo shall be liable to be seized, prosecuted, and condemned in like manner and under the same regulations, restrictions, and provisions as have been heretofore established for the recovery, collection, distribution, and remission of forfeitures to the United States by the several revenue laws.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, immediately after the passage of this act, advertise in twenty prominent newspapers, printed in as many cities in the United States, for proposals for citizens of the United States to manufacture alcoholic liquors for scientific, mechanical, and medicinal purposes, and to be sold, as nearly as may be, at the cost price, for scientific, mechanical, and medicinal purposes alone, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time direct.

SEC. 5. That the advertisement published under the preceding section must describe the kind of spirits required and must require the proposals to be accompanied with sufficient security for their performance.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, by the 30th day of June, 1884, notify the lowest bidders whose sureties are deemed sufficient of the acceptance of their proposals.

SEC. 7. That nothing in the preceding sections shall prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from contracting from time to time for such distilled spirits as may be necessary to meet the demands for scientific, mechanical, and medicinal purposes.

SEC. 8. That nothing in the preceding sections shall be construed so as to limit the time of any license for the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors which is at present operating: Provided, That no extension of time nor any new license shall be hereafter granted for the sale of any intoxicating liquors whatever.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. As I have said, the extract from The Voice was sent to me by the editor of a temperance paper in Louisville, Mr. R. B. Neal. Now that bill which the Clerk has read was referred to the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic and was reported back by Mr. KLEINER, accompanied by the following report:

The Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, having considered the bill (H. R. 596) to lessen crime and human suffering from alcoholism by restricting the use of distilled spirits to scientific, mechanical, and medicinal purposes, report the same back adversely, and recommend that it lie on the table.

Mr. LORE. I make the point that this is not a matter of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Delaware makes the point that the gentleman from Kentucky is not stating any question of personal privilege.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I thought that was admitted, Mr. Speaker, or I should have addressed myself to that point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. So far as the gentleman from Kentucky has gone the Chair has been unable to see any question of personal privilege in what the gentleman has stated.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I understood the Chair would not decide until I had been heard.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to Rule IX:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only.

Now, sir, here is a charge in the extract which I have just read from the New York paper, which was sent to me by my friend, the editor of a temperance paper in the city of Louisville, to whom I have already referred, calling my attention to the fact this article in The Voice did me great injustice. Otherwise I would never have seen it. It charges me with preparing a bill in the interest of the whisky-men, in this article which is headed, "Do the whisky-men want the whole earth?" I claim this not only affects me as a Representative, but affects the honor and dignity of this House, for I am a member of this House; and if a member of the House, after having advocated certain principles, can introduce a bill that I have introduced here and then can present other bills which seem to favor the whisky interest, and can be justly charged that he is doing it for the whisky interest, then it does seem to me it rises to the dignity of a personal question at least.

It is to address myself to that question for which I have risen, and to recite the history of this subject and my action with it, that I began in the way I did, and no one made the point of order, or else I should have begun by reading the rule under which I made the point of order. But in order to save the time of the House and consume as little of its time as possible at this late date in the session I did not adopt that course.

I now yield the floor to the decision of the Chair. If I am entitled to the floor on that decision I will proceed; otherwise, I will take my seat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman presents, certainly, a question of personal explanation, but the Chair has been unable to see that a question of personal privilege under the rules of the House is presented, and which would give the gentleman the right to occupy the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. May I be permitted to call the attention of the Chair to the last sentence but one in the newspaper article to which I first called attention and which I have sent to the desk?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will cause the sentence to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

This bill is said to have been framed at the instance of the whisky-men. Mr. WHITE is the Congressman who recently applied an insulting term to Speaker CARLISLE.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The Chair will observe as stated in that article that a direct charge is brought against me. In response I wish to state that I have never in my life applied an insulting term or epithet to the Speaker of this House.

There is not a man on this floor who has a higher regard for the Speaker of the House than I have, and I am ready to offer the usual resolution complimenting him in the very highest terms on the fair, impartial, and proper manner in which he has discharged the duties of his office. The last clause but one in the article accuses me of having prepared or framed a bill at the instance of the whisky-men, and I claim in that I have the right not only to deny that charge, which I do most emphatically, but to show conclusively by the RECORD that it is false from the beginning to the end; and I was proceeding to address myself to that subject when I was interrupted by the gentleman from Delaware, who made the point that I did not present a question of privilege.

I understood the Chair had recognized it as such by allowing me to proceed for some time, and of course I did not have the rule read, for the reason that I did not suppose there could be any question as to the fact that I had the right to take the floor for that purpose. As I have said, I now yield to the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that it would hear the gentleman on his question of privilege, no point of order having been made. The Chair indulged the gentleman from the beginning of his remarks until the point of order was made. The gentleman from Delaware having made the point of order, the Chair was then ready to decide the question.

If, however, the gentleman desires to be heard further the Chair will indulge him.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I understand that the Post-Office appropriation bill is ready to be reported by the conferees, and I will yield for that purpose, but claim the right to take the floor afterward. If, however, the gentleman is not ready I will proceed with my remarks now.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he will yield to me to call up a bill for consideration.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I will yield to the gentleman with pleasure; not, however, to take me off the floor.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Of course not.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I have just promised that I would yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], and I now yield to him.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House for a moment in which to make a statement concerning House bill No. 8177. This is a bill providing for the payment of certain claims authorized to be investigated and reported to Congress, and thus far it has been passed by every Congress to which they have been reported since 1864, when the original act authorizing them was passed.

Mr. HERR. These are what are known as the 4th of July claims?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HERR. I hope that will pass.

Mr. McMILLIN. There never has been a single instance, from the vote on the passage of the original bill to this session of Congress, when this bill was reported that it was not passed. I hope the House will not make an exception in this case.

It is not possible under that law that the payment can be ultimately defeated. It must be paid at some time. The bill providing for the auditing of these claims requires that they shall be first examined by an agent of the Quartermaster's Department, then passed upon by the Quartermaster-General, and after that, to make assurance doubly sure, they are reported to the Third Auditor, and by him they are again investigated; and if they are found to be in accordance with the law and properly authenticated, they are recommended to Congress. That has been done heretofore uniformly, and the bill making these appropriations now, if I remember correctly, is some $40,000 less than the bill of last year. It has not been even the custom to read the bill heretofore. The committee after an examination reported favorably upon it, and I ask the House to give unanimous consent to take it up and consider it. It has never taken more than ten or twenty minutes to dispose of.

Mr. PUSEY. What is the aggregate amount of the bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. Two hundred and twenty-one thousand dollars. The committee have amended the bill by striking out a certain class of claims not heretofore allowed, so as to secure perfect uniformity with bills passed heretofore. The claims stricken out amount to about $6,000.

I ask, therefore, that unanimous consent be given to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of this bill and put it upon its passage.

A MEMBER. Is there any new legislation in the bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. It contains no legislation whatever.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina. I object.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope my friend from North Carolina will not insist on his objection.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina. Other bills just as worthy as this have been objected to when the request for unanimous consent was made; and I think that they are entitled to be passed just as well as this.

Mr. McMILLIN. I appeal to the gentleman from North Carolina not to insist on his objection. If he does it will work great injustice to a large class of citizens. It is a bill which can not be defeated ultimately; it can only be postponed. Not even the interest has been paid on these claims for the twenty years that they have been due. I trust the gentleman will withdraw his objection. No man can question the justice of the payment under the law. I have co-operated with that gentleman in matters in which I know he sympathizes, and I ask him not to reward that co-operation by refusing consideration to this bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. If that gentleman withdraws his objection I will renew it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I regret the gentleman's resolution to oppose this bill. A very large majority of the House favor it, but I know that pending the consideration of this election case the bill I have designated can only be taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. BUDD. I move to suspend the rules to take up and pass the House bill No. 147. I will state that the motion for a recess expired at 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from California is not in order except by unanimous consent. Even if all the motions for a recess had been dropped the question before the House would be upon the adoption of the report of the Committee on Elections. But the Chair thinks the motions for a recess have not been dropped, because they were in order when made.

Mr. BUDD. I understand the first motion was to take a recess until 12 o'clock. That was amended so as to take a recess until 11 o'clock, and a further amendment was offered to take a recess until 10 o'clock to-night. Now as the time for all of these recesses has expired I claim that the question upon them is not now in order, the House having neglected to pass upon it until the time has expired.

The SPEAKER. That may be a good reason why the House should not agree to those motions, but it is not a question of order.

Mr. BUDD. Can a recess be taken so as to be retroactive?

The SPEAKER. That consideration will govern gentlemen in their votes on the question.

Mr. ANDERSON. In one case the motion was for a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the record shows distinctly that the first motion was to take a recess until 12 o'clock midnight. The proposition was then made to amend that so as to take the recess until 11 o'clock, and then there was a proposition to amend the amendment so as to take the recess until 10 o'clock to-night.

Mr. ANDERSON. The first motion was my own, to take a recess for one hour.

The SPEAKER. The motion to take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow would not be in order because the term of this Congress expires on the 3d of March, and to-morrow would be the 4th, and the members of this Congress would not then be in office.

Mr. BUDD. I inquire of the Chair if a motion for a recess is in order when the proposed recess dates back of the time at which the question is taken?

The SPEAKER. But the motion for a recess was in order when it was made, and the Chair can not take away from the House the consideration of a motion which was in order when it was presented. That question is addressed to each member of the House, and must control his vote.

Mr. BUDD. Had a motion to adjourn been made and carried, would not that have killed the motion for a recess?

The SPEAKER. But there has been no motion to adjourn.

Mr. BUDD. But this afternoon there was a recess taken.

The SPEAKER. And it was when the House reassembled after the recess that these motions were made.

Mr. BUDD. I make the point of order that as the time has expired which was covered by the time mentioned in these motions for a recess, it is the same as if a recess had in fact been taken.

The SPEAKER. There has been no recess whatever since half past 7 this afternoon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 653) for the relief of John B. Davis; and

A bill (H. R. 8183) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Murdaugh, of Virginia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] is recognized.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] yielded the floor to me, and I yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] for a few moments to call up a bill. I will now yield the floor temporarily to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLIS. This is a matter to which I think there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The report which the gentleman from Louisiana proposes to make is always in order.

Mr. ELLIS. The Chair is a little in error; this is not a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought the gentleman had risen to present the report of a committee of conference.

RED CROSS ASSOCIATION.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask unanimous consent to pass the Senate joint resolution which authorizes the loan to the Red Cross Association of twelve hospital tents. That society is now organizing a field hospital for the ex-Union and ex-confederate encampments at the exposition; and for the purpose of a free hospital they ask the Secretary of War for a loan of twelve tents. The Senate has passed the resolution, and I believe there will be no objection to its consideration by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the joint resolution which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. Res. 122) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan twelve hospital tents and outfits to the American Association of the Red Cross for use in New Orleans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Can the gentleman from Louisiana take me off the floor?

Mr. ELLIS. I have no desire to interfere with the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. If unanimous consent is given it will not affect any matter now pending.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I have no objection. It ought to pass. The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to loan to the American Association of the Red Cross, for use by their branch in New Orleans at the World's Exposition grounds, twelve hospital tents and outfits; provided satisfactory security is given for the safe-keeping and return of the same.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER] withdraws his objection to the bill which I desire to call up.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois on the right [Mr. SPRINGER] demands the regular order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I believe I am entitled to the floor. The gentleman who has charge of the appropriation bill is not ready to report, as he was supposed to be, so I will proceed with my statement.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] to yield to me a moment to pass a pension bill for a poor widow.

Mr. BRUMM. Regular order.

Mr. THOMPSON. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] to let me make a short statement.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had receded from its amendment, numbered 112, to the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I now desire to present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes; and I ask that the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 27, 28, and 74; That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 110, 111, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out section 11 of the bill of the House, and insert the following in lieu thereof, to wit: "That immediately upon and after the date of the passage of this act all Indians committing against the person or property of another Indian or other person any of the following crimes, namely, murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, arson, burglary, or larceny, in any Territory of the United States, or either within or without an Indian reservation, shall be subject therefor to the laws of such Territory relating to said crimes, and shall be tried therefor in the same courts and in the same manner, and shall be subject to the same penalties, as are all other persons charged with the commission of said crimes respectively. And the said courts are hereby given jurisdiction of all such cases. And all such Indians committing any of the above crimes against the person or property of another Indian, or other person, within the boundaries of any State of the United States, or within the limits of any Indian reservation, shall be subject to the same laws, tried in the same courts, and in the same manner and subject to the same penalties as are all other persons committing any of the above crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States."

And the Senate agree to the same.

E. JOHN ELLIS,
WM. S. HOLMAN,
THOMAS RYAN,

Managers on the part of the House,

H. L. DAWES,
P. E. PLUMB,

M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. ELLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS. The remaining point of disagreement between the two Houses upon this bill has been settled by the recession of the Senate.

A. K. SHEPARD.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to have taken up for consideration at the present time the bill (H. R. 28) for the relief of A. K. Shepard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and required to pay to A. K. Shepard, of Tuscaloosa, Ala., the sum of $17,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows: Strike out "$17,000" and insert "$14,458.07."

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Before objections are called for I hope the report will be read.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I shall not object, provided the other side of the House— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

UNLAWFUL OCCUPANCY OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to a question of privilege. In order that the question may be brought clearly before the House I ask the Clerk to read from the RECORD what I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. If objection is made, of course the other matter of privilege must be settled first.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I understand that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LEWIS] will occupy a very few moments.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Was my request objected to?

The SPEAKER. There were a great many objections.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Then I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That has been called for; but the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LEWIS] states that he rises to a question of personal privilege. If it be a question of personal privilege, it of course interrupts the regular order.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask the Clerk to read what I send to the desk, and then I wish to make a statement to show that it is a matter of privilege.

The Clerk read as follows:

THURSDAY, February 12, 1885.

The recess having expired, the House (at 10 o'clock a. m., Friday, February 13, 1885) resumed its session.

UNLAWFUL OCCUPANCY OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. I move to concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6479) to prevent the unlawful occupancy of the public lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Senate amendments will be read.

The several amendments of the Senate were reported.

Mr. PAYSON. I move to concur in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question: whether this has been considered by the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir; and unanimously reported by the committee with that recommendation.

Mr. LEWIS. Now I desire to state to the House that that bill was passed through the House and the Senate amendments concurred in by virtue of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that the matter had been considered and unanimously recommended by the Committee on Public Lands. And I wish to state to the House that it had never been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and the amendments had never been recommended by that committee.

A MEMBER. Where is the question of privilege?

Mr. LEWIS. The question of privilege, as I understand—

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not understand that this presents any question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it does.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask that the gentleman have the courtesy to speak on this when my colleague [Mr. PAYSON] is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it does not involve any question of privilege.

Mr. LEWIS. I hope I may be allowed to make a statement as to why I think it is a question of privilege. The bill as amended by the Senate made important changes in the bill as it passed the House. The bill as it came back from the Senate contained important amendments, which had been adopted by the Senate and which had not been considered by the committee on Public Lands of the House.

The bill as amended by the Senate was never referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I state this to be a question of privilege, because if that bill passed by virtue of a statement that the amendments of the Senate had been recommended by the Public Lands Committee and that statement be not correct, as I say it is not—

Mr. ROWELL. I object, in the absence of my colleague [Mr. PAYSON], to having anybody under color of a question of personal privilege say that my colleague has stated what is not true.

Mr. LEWIS. I do not desire to take any advantage of the gentleman from Illinois. He was in his seat when I came into the House to-night.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope this may go over until my colleague comes in. There must be some mistake about this matter.

Mr. LEWIS. I am perfectly willing to wait till he returns. I only desire—

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I object to further remarks on that subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see that any matter of personal privilege is involved. A bill may be passed by the House upon an erroneous statement of fact or upon unsound argument, but no question of privilege is therefore involved.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Still when a question of this kind is raised it would be fair to allow my colleague to be heard.

The SPEAKER. That is another matter.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to be heard in this matter. I wish to call to the attention of the House—

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope this matter will be allowed to wait until my colleague appears.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded by several gentlemen.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire consent to take up and pass a little pension bill for the benefit of a poor widow. It has already passed the Senate. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. THOMPSON. No gentleman has risen in his seat and objected.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am satisfied that if my proposition is understood no objection will be made. This bill is for the benefit of a poor widow who lives in the District of Columbia, and has no representative on this floor. I ask that the bill be read. It is Senate bill 1446. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded by a number of gentlemen.

Mr. THOMPSON. This is only a little pension bill for a poor widow who has no representative on this floor.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 8102) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a railroad bridge by the East and Middle Tennessee Railroad Company over the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. The regular order has not been demanded with reference to the proposition that I wish to submit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order cuts off everything. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to the floor if he desires to proceed.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I have yielded now as far as I can, I think—

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask to have the title of this bill read. I am satisfied that there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the title of the bill if there be no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1446) granting a pension to Mrs. Lew Gobright McFalls.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I hope the demand for the regular order will be withdrawn to let this bill be passed. I have one myself I want to ask unanimous consent for.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have never asked the passage of a pension bill [cries of "Regular order!"], and I hope no objection will be made to this.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, what is this bill which The Voice criticises in the article I have called attention to? I desire to read it for the information of the House. It is a joint resolution which I introduced on the 26th day of January, 1885, No. 319.

Mr. LORE. I make the point of order that the gentleman does not state a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky will proceed, and the Chair will determine whether or not he presents a question of privilege. So far the Chair thinks the gentleman has not done so.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. This is a joint resolution which I introduced in the following terms:

Whereas it has transpired that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the present Secretary of the Treasury have, by unwarranted regulation, assumed to extend the bonded period for distilled spirits for two hundred and eight days, in direct violation of the action of the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses; and

Whereas the tobacco tax is an unnecessary burden upon the people, and is a fraud, useful only upon our statute-books for the purposes of the tobacco monopolists; and

Whereas the present system of internal-revenue taxation is far less beneficial to the people than useful to continue a highly protected and infernal industry, manipulated by unscrupulous capitalists, who strive to corrupt Congress and to control the Government in the interest of their monopoly of the tobacco and whisky trade; and

Whereas there is no longer any guarantee that the laws in relation to internal revenue will be honestly executed, although $5,000,000 be annually appropriated for that purpose: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all acts or parts of acts concerning the superintendence of the assessment or collection of any duties or taxes imposed by any law providing internal revenue be, and the same are hereby, abolished from and after July 1, 1885.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on that resolution this paper arraigns me as having prepared a bill in the interest of the whisky-men. It is well known to the House, because for four years the question has been discussed, that there is a whisky lobby in Washington, that there is a whisky combination, reaching from the great lakes to the Gulf and from the Atlantic almost to the Pacific Ocean, in favor of reducing the tax on whisky and intoxicating liquors generally.

When that was proposed in the Forty-seventh Congress I opposed it because it was giving to the whisky monopoly every cent that the tax was reduced. If there were 100,000,000 of gallons in bond and the tax was reduced from 90 to 50 cents it was equivalent to giving to the whisky ring $40,000,000, and hence I opposed it. But, sir, when in the Forty-seventh Congress a modified bill came into this House with ing for the extension of the bonded period for two years, or practically a loan of the money invested in the whisky in bond—

Mr. LORE, Mr. Speaker, I must insist upon the point of order that the gentleman does not state a question of privilege, and beg the Chair to pass upon it. There is nothing in what he has stated to show that his character as a Representative on this floor has been assailed.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I suppose we had as well settle the question here, and I submit to the ruling of the Chair. The Chair understands the point I have made, and I submit to the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that the Chair does not think the criticism of a newspaper upon the character or manner of introducing a bill in the House of Representatives is that sort of an attack upon a member in his representative capacity that raises it to the dignity of a question of privilege under the rules of the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I desire to be heard on the appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious matter not only to me, but it is rapidly becoming one to the whole country. More than 150,000 people broke loose from the strong attachments of the Democratic and Republican parties to enter their protest against the proceeding of both parties at the last annual election.

Mr. TUCKER. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman is not addressing himself to the appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is entitled to be heard on the appeal.

Mr. TUCKER. But he is not proceeding in order, I submit, by addressing himself to the question on which he appeals.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I have listened to the gentleman from Virginia many a time, and must confess I have always been disappointed, because he seldom sticks to the text himself, and he ought not to object to my using some discretion in this matter.

The question of order, as I understand, that has been raised is whether the article which I have read constitutes a question of personal privilege. I believe it does, for reasons which I have partially stated and which I propose to submit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman yield a moment to receive a message from the Senate?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Certainly.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8256) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives to the bill making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, and asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Messrs. ALLISON, HALE, and BUCK as conferees on the part of the Senate.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I would like to explain that when I introduced the first resolution in the Forty-fourth Congress to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, I was then persuaded, as I am now thoroughly convinced, that the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage was simply to imbibe a poison; and as the law prohibits the sale of prussic acid, of arsenic, and other poisons except under regulation, that there should be some power to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors which is dragging down to death hundreds of thousands of strong, able-bodied, right-minded men every year and making widows and orphans, filling the poor-houses, filling the jails, filling the penitentiaries.

Mr. TULLY. I rise to a point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the question before the House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The report on that bill I have had read from the Clerk's desk, that it was beneath the dignity of this House. Subsequently I introduced a bill for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic. It is as follows:

A bill to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commission of seven persons, not more than four of whom shall belong to the same political party nor be advocates of prohibition, who shall be selected solely with reference to personal fitness and capacity for an honest, impartial, and thorough investigation, and who shall hold office until their duties shall be accomplished, but not to exceed two years. It shall be their duty to investigate the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to revenue and taxation, and its general economic, criminal, moral, and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime, social vice, the public health, and general welfare of the people; and also to inquire as to the practical results of license and prohibitory legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the several States of the Union.

Sec. 2. That the said commissioners shall serve without salary; that the necessary expenses incidental to said investigation, not exceeding $10,000, shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon vouchers to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and for this purpose the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. It shall be the further duty of said commissioners to report the result of their investigation, with such suggestions and recommendations as they may see fit to make, and the expenses attending the same, to the President, within eighteen months after the passage of this act, to be transmitted by him to Congress.

The report on that bill I hold in my hand. It was submitted by Mr. ENGLISH, and is as follows:

Mr. ENGLISH, from the Select Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 2142:

The committee to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2142) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic beg leave to report the bill back to the House with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The power to regulate the retail liquor traffic has, from the foundation of the Union, been regarded as the exclusive right of the States rather than of the General Government. Attempts have been made by some of the States to entirely prohibit the manufacture or sale of spirituous or malt liquors, but with little apparent success, and the interests of true temperance and sobriety, so much to be desired, would seem to demand wise and stringent restrictions and effective safeguards in connection with the liquor traffic rather than impractical efforts at absolute prohibition.

To the several States of the Union properly belongs the right to enact such local police regulations as will throw every proper restriction around the liquor traffic compatible with the personal and property rights of the citizen, but uniform police regulations enacted by Congress practically suited to the different wants and requirements of the people of all the various States would be difficult to frame and more difficult to execute. Any attempt to control the personal habits and private conduct of the individual should be opposed, so long as he does not interfere with the personal rights of others or the peace and order of society in general.

As it is a matter of grave doubt whether Congress has the right to regulate the liquor traffic in the several States of the Union, and as there seems to be no great pressing or urgent necessity for the passage of this bill, your committee hold that it is not advisable to attempt the exercise of doubtful powers by the General Government in these matters which appear more properly to belong to the States themselves.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill be reported back to the House with a recommendation that it do not pass, and they ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

Now, sir, from that report any one can see that the House, representing the American people, does not believe that it is a matter for the National Government to meddle with. Again, in the Democratic platform [cries of "Vote!"] was a protest against sumptuary laws, and a declaration that all laws interfering with individual liberty should not be passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I understand the Committee on Appropriations have a conference report ready, and I know the gentleman from Kentucky will yield for its presentation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has stated he would yield at any time for any motion coming from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope we will attend to the business before us. The SPEAKER pro tempore. No gentleman on the Appropriations Committee has taken the floor.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I call the attention of the House to the fact. Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman having charge of the bill, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will be in the Hall in a short time.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not think we should be kept here in this scandalous way.

Mr. HERR. The bill has been here for more than an hour, and if we are not to consider it, I move the House do now adjourn. It has been withheld for some reason I know not of.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The way the House has been treated on these appropriation bills has been entirely without precedent.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have the report of the conference committee. [Cries of "Let us have it!"] I have preferred the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations should be present in the House when it should be considered. I have waited for some time for his return to the House. He has been busily engaged in a conference committee and has not been able to be here. I should prefer to wait until he comes here. [Cries of "Let us adjourn!"] If it is the demand of the House the bill shall be presented, I will yield to that desire. [Cries of "Present it!"]

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman it is within his discretion to call it up.

Mr. BINGHAM. It would be a wise discretion.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Speaker, having the concurrence of my colleague on the subcommittee, I present the report to the House. The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20 of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8139) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

R. W. TOWNSHEND,
W. S. HOLMAN,
R. G. HERR,

Managers on the part of the House.

P. B. PLUMB,
W. B. ALLISON,
J. B. BECK,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The conference committee has been unable to agree upon either of the propositions on which the two Houses have dissented. I will say to the House now, frankly, that it does seem to me that we are brought face to face with the question as to whether this bill shall fail or whether we shall adopt the proposition submitted by the Senate, or whether some terms of compromise shall be submitted. We have been unable to agree upon any terms of compromise. I now desire to leave it to the House to decide the question as to what shall be done with regard to this bill. I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not able to agree fully with the views expressed by my friend from Illinois. I do not think the question is whether the House shall concur in the amendment of the Senate, the subsidy amendment, or whether this bill shall fail. The legislative powers of this Government are vested in two bodies—a House of Representatives and a Senate; and the question is presented whether the House shall recede from its disagreement or whether the Senate shall recede from its amendment, or whether this bill shall fail.

The general rule according to my experience—and I have had some experience on conference committees—has been that the House proposing a proposition, if it was resisted by the other, was the House that would recede. The party occupying the negative stands upon a different footing from the party that propounds the proposition. The rule of the Senate prohibits legislation upon an appropriation bill. The measure pending contains legislation.

It is a purely legislative provision, a provision that changes a very important provision of our statutes that has been in force for a great many years. It incorporates into our system of legislation touching postal matters a policy in violation of the fundamental principle on which our free institutions are founded.

There are therefore reasons why the House, knowing that men are amenable to the law of reason, may indulge the expectation that the usual result will follow in the case of this measure; first, that the Senate having propounded this proposition, and the House dissenting from it, will, according to the usual practice of legislative bodies, recede from its proposition; and secondly, that it will do so the more cheerfully because the proposition itself is in defiance of its own rules as well as in defiance of the rules of this House, being an independent legislative proposition upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. I call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that the very proposition now in controversy was ruled in order in this House by a chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and that his decision was sustained.

Mr. HOLMAN. And yet I indulge the belief that the distinguished gentleman who occupied the chair on that occasion, on reviewing that decision with opportunities for considering the precedents, would change that ruling. My friend does not attach, nor does any gentleman on this floor attach, any great importance to the action of the Committee of the Whole upon that ruling, as the first impulse on the part of the House or of the Committee of the Whole has always been to sustain the ruling of the officer occupying the chair, and more especially is that the case in the Committee of the Whole.

I therefore submit, Mr. Speaker, that the House may indulge the reasonable expectation that the usual course of legislation will take place with relation to this measure, and that it will be withdrawn by that legislative branch which has thought proper to present it when it is ascertained that it is not acceptable to the other branch of the legislative department. The interests of good legislation require it; the rules of parliamentary law as applied to the two branches require it; the rules of the Senate require it; the rules of the House of Representatives require it. If it was but an hour before the adjournment, within an hour of 12 o'clock to-morrow, gentlemen might entertain some apprehensions and might act upon the impulse and spur of the moment; but many hours will elapse before this Congress expires by the limitation of law, many votes can be taken, and many conferences can be had, and a just conclusion can be reached.

So I trust no gentleman will be induced to change his attitude upon this important question, the most important this House has been engaged upon in this or many preceding Congresses, under the impression that it involves in the least degree the question whether or not there shall be a called session of Congress, and I especially address gentlemen around me belonging to a great party whose great fundamental principle of equal and exact justice to all men is stricken down by this proposition, a proposition involving a principle of public policy that breaks into fragments the rock on which the great political party is founded which to-morrow, after a long period of time, becomes in a large degree responsible for the administration of this Government, and appeal to them to again reject this pernicious proposition and abide by the result.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then why did the gentleman report from the Committee on Appropriations a section almost exactly corresponding with this, and submit it to the House?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not aware of having reported any such proposition as that pending.

Mr. HERR. We did report it, though.

Mr. BINGHAM. You reported an appropriation of $600,000 for this service on a lease of four years.

Mr. RANDALL. The House rejected that.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; but I am speaking of the Democratic committee, to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] belongs.

Mr. HOLMAN. Excuse me, that because a majority of a committee of fifteen members, of which eight would constitute a majority, thought proper to report a given provision, that it must therefore be assumed that the provision was an expression of the Democratic sentiment, conceding that the majority of the committee was of that party, takes me by surprise; for a very small desertion from that majority would change the result, as it did in this instance. And, further, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] ought to have observed, though perhaps it escaped his observation, that the moment that proposition came into the House the Democratic sentiment was instantly expressed by Democratic members of that committee, a sentiment which for nearly a century has been steadily asserted by that party of undying hostility to all forms of subsidy as the most odious form of class legislation, and that the measure so reported was promptly rejected by this House.

Mr. BINGHAM. By what majority?

Several other members also addressed Mr. HOLMAN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] if these interruptions are with his consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would of course prefer not to be interrupted, but will answer any questions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair will undertake to see that the gentleman is not interrupted. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will proceed.

Mr. HOLMAN. The proceedings of the committee-room of course can not be brought into debate. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have said about all that it is proper for me to say upon this occasion. I shall hold it to be a bad omen—and I know there can be but one response to that upon this side of the House—I shall hold it to be a bad omen if, when the great political party known throughout all its history as opposed to this class of legislation, on the eve of coming into power reverses its record and adopts the principle of subsidy—a principle which, prevailing in every government of Europe, has filled those lands with tears, poverty, and wretchedness, a policy which in all ages has brought misery upon mankind. The magnitude of the pending measure is not in the amount at stake but in the fatal principle involved.

Sir, the principle involved in this measure of subsidy caused the wretchedness in the Old World that drove our fathers to settle the forests of America, the oppression and injustice that gave courage to men and women to face the hardships and dangers of the New World rather than bear the wrongs of the Old. It is the principle on which monarchy is founded. The root of despotism and kingly institutions is found in this very principle of subsidy; and that a disciple of Jefferson, who saw in the equal rights of men the only guarantee of just government and human freedom—that a disciple of Jefferson should at the beginning of the second century of our Republic favor this monstrous principle of subsidy is beyond belief.

The teachings of that great apostle of freedom have ceased to speak to the hearts of men, if, in the American Congress, where his professed followers are in the majority, a principle like this, however disguised in form, however hidden by specious pretenses and obscure provisions, can command support. Sir, I trust no gentleman will be deceived, whatever attempts may be made to obscure it. This is a subsidy and not a mere compensation for services to be rendered; and if there have been expressions in approval of it by the great press of this country, the voice of the nation, they have escaped my observation.

Sir, I have had occasion twice already to refer to the progress of direct subsidy from the time when it made its first appearance in Congress within the last twenty-five years. It began with a small subsidy for the same avowed purpose as that expressed in this measure—the extension of commerce—of only $75,000 a year; then followed one of $150,000 a year; then a subsidy of half a million a year; then a half a million more a year to this Pacific Steamship Company, and then a sense of humiliation and shame fell upon this country—for the dishonor of Congress was the price of that subsidy! Such, sir, must be the current history of subsidy in this country whenever it is resorted to, from the fact that it is incompatible with the fundamental principles upon which republican institutions are founded and can only triumph in dishonor.

That such a measure can be carried through by the ordinary agencies of legislation can not be believed. Thirteen years ago, when less care than now was used as to the admission of strangers on the floor, this very Hall was, as it would be to-night in the absence of your severe rules, thronged with men who, in the name of commerce and the American flag, were demanding a subsidy of half a million a year in addition to half a million already granted for a period of ten years to a corporation now represented in your lobby. And, sir, your records show the dishonor that attended that measure; and the same pernicious influences are sought to be brought to bear upon this Congress in its last hours to mar and blast its reputation.

I know, sir, I address a body of gentlemen, no one of whom can be approached by the corrupt and seductive means then resorted to—influences which corrupt and pollute the fountains of law. But, gentlemen, the Forty-eighth Congress hastens to its close. In a few hours the knell of its existence will have been rung. We shall go to our homes; we shall meet our constituents; and I am confident that gentlemen returning to their constituents after having maintained here the principle of equal and exact justice to all men, the equal rights of all, and condemned the infamous policy which taxes all for the benefit of the few, will meet those constituents with clearer eyes, with a more confident front, with more manly self-respect and confidence than if they had permitted the seductive and delusive influences of the hour to control their sense of justice and voted for a measure which recognizes the right of Congress to give to the few the fruits of the labor of the many.

This is not in truth a just or important public measure, but a subsidy to plausible gentlemen who have the audacity to demand that which Congress has no right to grant—the promotion of their private fortunes at the expense of their fellow-citizens. Do you expect, gentlemen, that you will promote your carrying trade by these artificial means? I do not say your commerce, because your commerce increases everyday and every hour. Did you increase your carrying trade by your first subsidy or your second or your third or your fourth, out of which, as shown before a committee of Congress, $750,000 was taken for corrupting the fountains of law in the American Congress?

At the very time when for the purpose as was claimed of promoting your carrying trade with China and Japan, you were paying a subsidy to this powerful corporation that now demands this subsidy, a line of steamships without subsidy was competing with it for the trade between your Pacific shores and the ports of China and Japan.

No, no, sir; never in the history of this country up to this hour has just and wise statesmanship imposed upon the whole people a charge and burden, advancing the fortunes of the few; and never can it be in the future while ours remains a government of the people. Never will it bring substantial benefit or advantage to the American people. It is the policy of Government which does not take from "the mouth of labor the bread it has earned" that give prosperity, strength, and true greatness to a Government like ours.

I trust, sir, that notwithstanding this measure comes upon us again at an unhappy hour—night is not a time for safe and prudent legislation—I trust, sir, that those who believe in the equal and just rights of men, who scorn the principle that the great mass of the people are born to toil that a few men may amass fortunes, will see to it that the corrupting and un-American principle of subsidy shall not obtain a triumph in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH, of Missouri). Thirty-five minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I reserve my time until gentlemen on the other side shall have been heard from.

Mr. HERR. I move that the House recede from its disagreement and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will call the previous question unless the gentleman—

Mr. HERR. The gentleman can not call the previous question while I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor, and has not yielded. He moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not essential that the report of the conference committee should be adopted before the motion of the gentleman from Michigan can be entertained?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The committee of conference has simply reported disagreement; so that there is no report to adopt. The motion of the gentleman from Michigan is in order.

Mr. HERR. Mr. Speaker, I make this motion for the purpose of avoiding an extra session of the next Congress.

Mr. WILLIS. The Congress after the next Congress.

Mr. HERR. I did not understand what the gentleman said.

Mr. WILLIS. I said the Congress after the next Congress was the one I supposed you meant.

Mr. HERR. I meant what I said.

Mr. WILLIS. I withdraw my remark.

Mr. HERR. I do not want an extra session of the next Congress. The Senate conferees hold just this position: "Gentlemen," they say, "here is a measure that the Senate has repeatedly for five years adopted by large majorities. It is a proposition that came into the House from your Committee on Appropriations, who reported it after due deliberation as the thing needed for the country. It is true the House voted it down, but the Senate in its judgment repeated this year what it has done heretofore so many times, and put this provision on this bill."

Now they say they can not yield it. They have been yielding it so long that they think it is no more than fair the House should yield and adopt this plan for one year.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. HERR. Very well.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Senate insists on this amendment?

Mr. HERR. I have said as much.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. And that unless the House recedes the Senate will not make appropriation to carry on the postal system?

Mr. HERR. The gentleman knows that I have not stated any such thing.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Notwithstanding that, the amendment itself is in contravention of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. HERR. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me, since this House has decided that it is proper on an appropriation bill, that it does not come with good grace from us to throw that matter into their faces.

But I was stating a fact. The Senate refused to yield, and I am very sorry the gentleman from Indiana should have talked here for half an hour in an appeal simply to the prejudice of the men here as politicians. This is not a political question that we are talking about. I call the attention of this House to the fact that I have not mentioned politics in this entire debate, and I can get at politics as quickly as any man in the world if you give me a live chance. [Laughter and applause.] But this is not a political question—it is a business question, pure and simple.

I have asked the gentleman from Indiana, and I now ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania—if he is here—to meet me on this one proposition. No man has yet answered it. This bill simply says that the incoming Democratic Postmaster-General may make such contracts with American vessels for carrying our foreign mails as he may now make with our coastwise vessels for carrying the mails on the coast.

Mr. BINGHAM. For one year only.

Mr. HERR. For one year only.

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. HERR. Certainly.

Mr. MORSE. Does this apply to any particular line in this country now?

Mr. HERR. Certainly not.

Mr. MORSE. Then it is entirely optional with the Postmaster-General to use the appropriation or not as he may see proper.

Mr. HERR. Every dollar of it is left subject to his judgment. If he does not think the service demands that a contract should be made with any vessel or any route he need not make it.

And instead of my friend from Indiana arraigning Democrats here for voting on this thing, I say to you when you vote against this proposition you vote a lack of confidence in your own Postmaster-General, which does not come with good grace from you.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was not the subsidy to the Brazil line, to the Sandwich lines, the first subsidy to the Pacific Mail, and the second subsidy to the Pacific Mail left in like manner to the discretion of the Postmaster-General; and were they not regarded as no less subsidies on that account?

Mr. HERR. I am not compelled to answer that, because he assumes this is a subsidy. I deny it. It simply gives the Postmaster-General power—

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. HERR. Now wait. To let contracts by advertisements to the lowest bidder for carrying our mails on the high seas. There is no subsidy in that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HERR. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was it not a subsidy to the Pacific Mail which lasted until 1882—a subsidy of $5,000,000?

Mr. HERR. What is the date?

Mr. HOLMAN. Begun in 1872 and ended in 1882. Was it not couched in the very same language as the proposition put by the Senate to this House?

Mr. HERR. Where was the trouble in those cases? Was it not in the officers executing the law? Can you not do better after all your experience, after all your years of hunger and thirst. [Laughter and applause.] Can not your Postmaster-General rise a little above such things? Have you learned nothing from your experience? Have you no confidence in your incoming Cabinet officers? But I want to go back to the original proposition. I have denied that this is a subsidy. It is a point you have not answered, and I have tried to get it answered in conference and out of conference, in season and out of season.

To-day you pay for carrying a letter 6,000 miles 2 cents, and you pay the same for carrying it 200 miles. Is that fair? Is it just? Will some one answer me that?

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend is too amiable to be severe. You pay under the 2-cent provision of sea postage the sum of $640 for every pound of freight carried. It is not astonishing, therefore, that the Postmaster-General said you are paying higher for this freight than any other.

Mr. HERR. I do not know what the gentleman is talking about. We pay no such price per pound. It is not a business that is paid by weight.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not?

Mr. HERR. It is a mileage business. It is 2 cents for carrying a letter 6,000 miles, and 2 cents for carrying a letter 200 miles. I ask you, but you do not answer my question. Come, now, answer it. Is it fair to give a ship no more for carrying our mails to China and Australia, a distance of 6,000 miles, than we pay from Boston to Halifax, a distance of 700 miles?

Mr. HOLMAN. You charge the same for transporting a letter of a citizen of New York to San Francisco as you would charge from Baltimore to Philadelphia.

Mr. HERR. Yes; but, my friend, you are unfortunate in your illustration. The question is not what the sender of the letter must pay, but it is this: What should the Government pay for carrying the letter? Should it not pay more for carrying a letter from New York to San Francisco than it does from Baltimore to Washington? The postage is the same in both cases, but not the price of carrying the mail.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; but if you give the vessel, whether it be American or foreign, the whole postage, is not that a fair pay for the service?

Mr. HERR. No, sir; that is a fair question but it answers itself, it seems to me. Such compensation is unfair for a long distance.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why?

Mr. HERR. I will try to explain it to the gentleman. If you give the man who carries the mail on your star route 300 or 500 or 1,000 miles just simply what the postage comes to, how many letters would be carried to your citizens throughout the United States over star routes, do you suppose? Can you answer me that? Do you think any would be carried? The distance traveled is the main thing.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did not the Postmaster-General answer that very well in his letter in 1864, under similar circumstances to this: that the larger portion of the mail carried, for which the vessel received the entire postage, was in matters pertaining to their own business?

Mr. HERR. Now, look at that for a moment; does not the gentleman know that the mail on every railroad in the United States, much of it, relates to business done right along the line of the roads?

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HERR. Certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. If you have so much confidence in the incoming Postmaster-General, why not provide an appropriation of $500,000, or six or seven hundred thousand or a million of dollars, and let him make contracts with the lowest bidder for the ocean-mail service?

Mr. HERR. Why I have not expressed any of this alarming confidence in the incoming Postmaster-General. [Laughter.] I merely called upon the gentleman from Indiana to stand up for and stand by his own Postmaster-General, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania might probably stand with him. I do not claim any marvelous confidence in the coming man, but the gentleman from Indiana has no right to appeal here to Democrats to defeat this bill as Democrats, especially as the appropriation is to be expended under the administration of their own party.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now let me ask the gentleman another question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. HERR. No; I will not yield any further, and such remarks would spoil any man's speech. [Laughter.]

Now, I do not wish to detain the House on this subject. I assert, and gentlemen on the other side do not answer it, that this is simply a proposition to pay proportionately by the mile for this service, just as we do in the star-route, in the railroad service, and the coastwise service, and as we ought to do on the ocean service for the work performed. And the Postmaster-General need not make a single contract with anybody under the terms of this bill if he does not get fair rates and if he does not think the service warrants such contract.

Now, what is the use of trying to higggle about this thing, or of lugging the cry of "politics" into it? This is simply a plain, business, common-sense proposition whether we shall stand by the vessels that carry the flag of our country, or stand by those that carry the flag of some other nation. This bill carries just the same—now mark it—the same amount of money for foreign ships as for American ships, and these American ships run within a little of precisely the same number of miles that the foreign ships do, and carry the mails over every single foot of the distance. It is a simple proposition to ask the people of this nation to do as well by themselves as they do for outsiders, and that is all there is in it.

For myself I am in favor of subsidies if need be to again set our flag afloat, but this is not a subsidy. I would have three times, ay, five times the amount in this bill if I could thereby once more put American ships on the highways of commerce and save to the people of this nation the $120,000,000 that we pay annually to foreign vessels for carrying our own products.

Mr. CLAY. But this would not do it.

Mr. HERR. This may not do it, but it is the entering-wedge; it looks to that result, and I trust may finally end in building up an American merchant marine that shall be worthy of this great American nation. [Applause.] And while we are trying to do it, instead of discussing it from a business standpoint our venerable friend from Indiana, with all of his experience, lugs in politics and tries to place you on that side of the House in a position of opposition to this measure proposed by the Senate by introducing something that does not apply to it at all—simply aims to defeat this bill by applying the party lash.

I have not appealed to my side of the House as Republicans; I appeal to both sides of this House as American citizens. And the American citizen is a higher title than any party name, is it not?

Mr. HOLMAN. I heard the same speech twelve years ago.

Mr. HERR. It was good then and is good now. I say, let us without reference to party stand by the interests of our own nation and provide for the prosperity of our own country. [Applause.] I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8279) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ELLIS. For ten years I have consistently favored a measure like this. In ten minutes I can not speak adequately to its merits.

I desire, in the first place, to ask for information a question which has passed my lips frequently and has never been successfully answered yet. I ask, in what is this a subsidy more than that which you pay to your coastwise steamers, your inland transportation, your star routes, or your railroads? It is intended that your Postmaster-General shall, after advertisement, contract with American ship-owners to carry American mails in United States steamships. In what is it a subsidy? It is nothing in the world but a measure to give honest pay for honest service; it is that and nothing more.

Is it Democratic to say we shall take the services of these steamships for nothing? Ah! that is the policy of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. He would revive that infamous law by which once the private property of citizens was confiscated for public use without due compensation. Now, sir, he has endeavored to crack the party lash. It has no terrors for me. Every time it is cracked I feel more and more determined to go on in my course independent of it. But I tell the gentleman from Indiana that Democrats who were Democrats before ever he was thought of for public life, who when he was a school-boy shaped and controlled the Democratic policy of the country, were in favor of measures akin to this. Shall I read what they say? I hold in my hand a collation of Democratic authorities. Was James K. Polk, of Tennessee, a Democrat? Listen to what he said:

The enlightened policy by which rapid communication with the various distant parts of the globe is established by means of American-built sea steamers would find an ample reward in the increase of commerce and in making our country and its resources more favorably known abroad; but the national advantage is still greater—of having our naval officers made familiar with steam navigation, and of having the privilege of taking the ships already equipped for immediate service at a moment's notice—and will be cheaply purchased by the compensation to be paid for the transportation of the mail in them, over and above the postages received.

That is from President Polk's annual message of December 7, 1847. Again, sir, I quote from the same authority:

Our farmers and planters, under a more just and liberal commercial policy, are finding new and profitable markets abroad for their augmented products.

The contracts for the transportation of the mail in steamships convertible into war steamers promise to realize all the benefits of our commerce and to the Navy which were anticipated. The first steamer thus secured to the Government was launched in January, 1847. There are now seven, and in another year there will probably be not less than seventeen afloat. While this great national advantage is secured our social and commercial intercourse is increased and promoted with Germany, Great Britain, and other parts of Europe.

That is from President Polk's annual message of December 5, 1848.

Now, I will quote from Senator Bayard, the father of the distinguished gentleman who is now at the other end of the Capitol. He said:

I am willing to trust American skill and industry in competition with any people on the globe, when they stand nation to nation, without Government interference. But if the treasury of a foreign nation is poured into the lap of individuals for the purpose of destroying the interests of my country, or for building up a commercial marine at the expense of the commerce and prosperity of the United States, I, for one, will count no cost in countervailing such governmental action on the part of Great Britain or any foreign power.

Was Senator Badger, of North Carolina, a Democrat? Here is what he said on the question of the Collins subsidy. He said the question was one of "controlling importance;" it is a "mighty, peaceful, and important contest between the United States and Great Britain for supremacy;" and that "the question whether we would voluntarily surrender that which, to obtain and perpetuate, Great Britain would, without hesitation, sacrifice one hundred-times the amount of money involved." I have not time to quote him further.

Was Lewis Cass a Democrat? He said:

Well, sir, it is a question of protection—of high and important and holy protection—in the best sense of the term; the protection of our country, of our expatriated seamen, of our commerce, of our interests, of our honor, of our soil, of all that gives dignity and character to nations; protection against defeat, disgrace, and dishonor.

This kind of protection to our commerce is as effectual as the protection afforded by expensive naval armaments.

Humphrey Marshall, of Kentucky, said he would vote for a subsidy to a line of mail steamers "to maintain a nursery for our Navy" and "to maintain a competition with the British lines."

Senator James C. Jones, of Tennessee, than whom Tennessee has hardly produced a more brilliant statesman, said:

I should regard it as a national misfortune if the enterprise should fail.
I am willing to vote large and liberal allowance.

I might go on and accumulate authority after authority to show that the position assumed by the gentleman from Indiana is not Democracy, unless it be that latter kind of Democracy which seems to have no eyes for anything except a niggardly, pseudo, so-called economy. [Applause.]

Then, sir, why should we not treat these two vessels alike? Here are two vessels at a wharf in New York city, both built of iron, both built upon the same lines, with the same angles, both the same in power, both the same in registry, the same in armament—alike in everything—both American ships. One of them is engaged in the coastwise trade, and with her you contract for the carriage of your mails as you do with a steamboat in the inland mail service; you pay her upon an average 60 cents a mile; she is greeted often by a friendly port; there is no mark of hardship upon her; you protect her in a monopoly of the coastwise trade, and in addition you pay her a liberal compensation for the postal service she performs.

[Here the hammer fell.]

On motion of Mr. KING the time of Mr. ELLIS was extended, by unanimous consent, for five minutes.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I was contrasting the treatment that we give to these two twin vessels of which I was speaking, both alike, both American ships bearing the American flag, both registered under the American customs laws.

I have shown you what we do with the one; but the other, what have we done with her for forty years? We have taken her absolutely for our public service without just compensation. It was the action of a Democratic Congress which repealed last spring the infamous law by which that was done. That law was repealed in the expectation that at this session we would take some action looking to adequate payment for this character of mail service. That ship goes across the ocean. It is she that brings in the imports from which you raise your revenue; it is she that goes abroad to find a foreign market for your ore products and all your surplus products. Oh, I wish that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] could get the soot and the dust out of his eyes and could climb up onto some high peak of the Alleghanies and look out upon the clear glistening ocean and upon the dark continents that rise out of it, and upon the multitudes there that wait for all that our factories can turn out, for our products of every kind that we can spare.

Oh, if you had control of those foreign markets! And you will achieve it if you put an American merchant marine upon the ocean; you will achieve it if you send American newspapers, American drummers, American merchants into those foreign lands. And if that were accomplished there would be no more strikes in our country, no more labor crises in Pittsburgh, but the smoke-clouds would hang perpetually over her and her fires of industry would never go out.

I trust that an enlightened public spirit, an enlightened public policy will prevail. I trust that this House will no longer quibble over this amendment. I trust that each man here feels entirely competent to take care of his own honor, without any suggestion from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Feeling thus, and acting in a broad and public-spirited way, you can not fail to take this policy which, if adopted, I believe will once more whiten every sea and gladden every continent with your sails and your flag, and bring to this country the greatest prosperity she has ever known. [Applause.]

Mr. HERR. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY].

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to follow what the gentleman from Louisiana has so eloquently said by an anecdote, but when I hear this talk about "subsidy," which, in my humble opinion, has nothing whatever to do with this case, and which strikes me as positively absurd, I am reminded of an anecdote related in the correspondence of Mrs. Carlyle. She tells a story of an old Scotch preacher who in a time of great rains in Scotland was prevailed upon to pray for a change. In the midst of his prayer for dry weather, and just as he had reached the most fervent part of it, there came a tremendous downpour of rain upon the roof of the church, threatening a deluge, and he burst out with the exclamation, "O Lord, this is too ridiculous!" Here is a plain business proposition before the House, and it should be so considered. It is a very easy thing to bandy epithets, to call hard names, and to impute false and dishonorable motives; but all that can not change the law or the facts of this case.

Yonder stately shaft which we have just completed to the spotless memory of the Father of his Country may in a short time have mud balls thrown at it by small boys or be otherwise disfigured; but the sturdy structure stands in secure repose upon its impregnable foundations. So it is with the law and the facts in this case. You can not change them. What is the law? We have abolished the compulsory feature, or it will cease to be operative on the 1st of April next. That is gone. The contractual feature remains. The Postmaster-General may contract to-day. But unfortunately there has been a limit fixed as to the compensation which he can award for this service. That limit is the sea and inland postage. Now, is that enough? That is the first question which we must meet. It has been shown time and again before our committee on shipping that it actually cost the Pacific Mail Steamship Company more money to transport the mail at Aspinwall to the post-office than it earned through the whole route. This, I say, is not fair.

Now, what is this provision? Is it to pay 50 cents per nautical mile? Is it to give what my friend from Indiana calls an arbitrary subsidy? No, sir; 50 cents a mile is a limit fixed, within which the Postmaster-General may contract, awarding the contract for the service to the lowest bidder. Is that a subsidy?

My friends are frightened at the word "subsidy." Do they know the origin of the term? Mr. Speaker, the old subsidium represented the third line of the Roman army in battle array; it was the reserve. And all I have to say is that you may put upon me the broad arrow-mark of a subsidist, if it is necessary in this sad day of the decadence of our commercial marine to call out all our reserves to put the flag where she can again chase her dancing shadow o'er forgotten seas. [Applause.]

Mr. HERR. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT].

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Speaker, think of the new definition which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has given of Democracy! But he has been met by my colleague [Mr. ELLIS], who has confronted him with a few eminent names of persons representing an opposite position. I might multiply them, Washington, Jefferson, Madison; in later times, Mr. King of Georgia, Mr. Polk of Tennessee, Mr. Soule, Mr. Cass, Mr. Bayard, Mr. Badger. Without being guilty of disrespect, in a debate where we find ourselves opposed to the gentleman from Indiana, we might be satisfied to oppose these authorities to his individual view. We might, indeed, be excused if we were indignant with him. Fortunately for me, I venture to say, I am accustomed to consider questions without reference to appeals to prejudice. Fortunately for me, allow me to add, I am accustomed to be considered above all association with prejudices in matters which I undertake to discuss.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that it is unworthy of the topic which is before the House, unworthy of the House, unworthy of the gentleman from Indiana, unworthy of the public policy under consideration, to resort as the gentleman has to mere generalities and declamations concerning Democracy, and to appeals to prejudice without reference to any facts upon which to stand.

What is the truth here? Instead of taking the money of the many to enrich the few, as the gentleman wrongfully insists is the case, it is proposed out of the net revenues of the Post-Office Department arising from foreign-mail service to maintain and carry on for the benefit of the people that same service; out of the moneys so earned to take a part only to support the service; to unify the system upon which the postal service of the country is conducted; to put the service on the ocean somewhat upon a footing of equality with the service on land; to say to the man who embarks his capital in steamships, who risks the perils of the sea, who is willing to carry the flag of his country into foreign ports, to be the medium of communication between merchant and merchant—to say to him that he shall receive a portion out of the net revenues thus realized. Is not this doing what is honest? Is not this doing what is right? Is not this applying to the foreign-mail service the same principle which we are constantly and familiarly applying to the service on the land?

In addition to the considerations which have been addressed to the House, we are able to point to the experience of all mankind who have resorted to the encouragement of steam navigation upon the seas. The postal ship, Mr. Speaker, is the herald of civilization, because she is the means by which correspondence between foreign countries is conducted, because by that correspondence contractual relations are brought about, and by means of those contractual relations national wealth and maritime defense and national glory are prospered.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERR. I now yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JOHN S. WISE].

Mr. KEIFER. As this debate is going to run along for some time I suggest that the gentleman from Texas, who has a conference report to submit, should be allowed to do so, so the bill may go to the enrolling clerks.

Mr. HERR. But not to be taken out of my time.

Mr. KEIFER. No; it will not be taken out of the gentleman's time.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HANCOCK. I submit the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House 8279, making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense and for the armament thereof for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, having met after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, and 6, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the said amendment insert the following: "And for the necessary and proper expenses of the said board and for the compensation of two civilians at $10 per day while so employed in the discharge of said duties the sum of $40,000, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated; and the report of said board shall be transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of War;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "For the construction of testing experimental wagon-carriages, for the purchase or manufacture of a multicharge gun and testing the same for;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN HANCOCK,
WILLIAM H. FORNEY,
W. D. WASHBURN,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
P. B. PLUMB,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HANCOCK. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. HANCOCK moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERR. I now yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JOHN S. WISE] for five minutes.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. Mr. Speaker, at a later hour of this day we shall hear from the President-elect of the United States, but I do not believe that in all he will utter words of greater wisdom or of more earnest truth will fall from his lips than those which I read to-night from him as pertinent to the subject now under discussion.

A MEMBER. By whom?

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. Mr. Grover Cleveland, President of the United States.

In 1840 American vessels carried 82.9 per cent. of all our exports and imports; in 1850, 72.5; in 1860, 66.5; in 1870, 35.6; in 1880, 17.4; in 1882, 15.5.

The citizen of New York, looking beyond his State and all her efforts in the interest of commerce and national growth, will naturally inquire concerning the causes of this decadence of American shipping.

While he sternly demands of his home government the exact limitation of taxation by the needs of the State, he will challenge the policy that accumulates millions of useless and unnecessary surplus in the national Treasury, which has been not less a tax because it was indirectly but surely added to the cost of the people's life.

Mr. Speaker, I propose for a few moments to address myself to the proposition there discussed of building up American commerce by the disposition of some of that accumulated surplus.

Thirty-eight years ago I was born in Rio Janeiro and to-day reside in the city of Richmond, Va. It so happened that when thirty-eight years ago I first saw the light it was while the United States of America was enjoying that South American trade, and to-day the little remnant of it that is left to us is in great part in the city of Richmond.

Year by year the commerce of the United States with the South American continent has decayed. Year by year it has been driven from the markets of the world. Year by year the splendid flag which once floated from the peak of those bounding greyhounds of the sea, the American clippers, has been driven from the seas by the superior wisdom and superior push of other nations.

To-day the problem in the United States is how shall we revive the lost commerce and maritime importance of the United States, where shall we find a market for American productions; and the conclusion of those who have considered that subject are almost unanimous that the only hope of American manufactures is in the re-establishment of our trade relations with the South American continent.

This bill proposes not a subsidy. I wish to God it did. If I were autocrat of the destinies of American trade and commerce I would build the ships at Government expense, load them with the productions of American citizens, and if need be even give them to the American sailor who would sail the vessel bearing our flag and sell the products of American toil abroad until we had driven Great Britain from the land that God made our natural market, with its trade-winds blowing and currents of the sea flowing with all advantages in our favor. [Applause.]

But this bill does no such thing as that. It is in no sense a subsidy. Look at it as you will, it is but honest pay for honest work. It is true it makes a slight discrimination in favor of the American ship, as a carrier of our mails, as against the British, but even that is insignificant as compared with Great Britain's well-known rule, that no mail-bag from her territory anywhere shall ever lie upon the deck of any but a British ship.

When we consider the history of our languishing commerce the men in whose favor this discrimination is made appeal most strongly to our sympathy and sense of simple justice.

Through thirty years of seemingly studied strangling of our commerce by the policy that has been pursued, there have yet remained Americans who refused to forget the glorious days of the McKays, when the Stars and Stripes crossed the equator oftener than the St. Andrew's cross. Through thirty years of neglect of our merchant marine there have yet remained Americans who loved the old stories of the days when we challenged the supremacy of Great Britain on the high seas, who still thrilled with Perry's immortal words, "We have met the enemy and they are ours," or loved to dream of the old Constitution frigate and the legend of her glorious victory when—

The Guerriere frigate bold
On the foaming ocean rolled,
Commanded by proud Decres so grandly, O,
With as choice a British crew
As a rammer ever drew,
They could lick the tars of France neat and handy, O;
But they never found their match
Till the Yankees they did catch,
For the Yankee boy for fighting is the dandy, O.

[Applause.]

Yes, through all these years the spirit which gave us these and a host of other splendid naval episodes in our early history has refused to be quenched. To the pushing energy of the American merchant—the hope of our maritime ascendancy—which naturally turns him to the high seas seeking market for his goods, and which refuses to yield to neglect, folly, or adverse legislation, and to an honored few of our enterprising men of wealth, who know and feel how indispensable is our merchant marine to our future greatness in the markets of the world, is due the small fragment of bottomry and foreign commerce still left to us.

I say, Mr. Speaker, there have been men who believed in the ultimate supremacy of American commerce, who never despaired of the future of American commerce, and who through all these years have clung to the hope of renewed prosperity to American commerce and the shipping trade; and this bill proposes but a step, a proper step, in the direction of assisting them not by subsidy but by offering honest compensation for the honest work performed by patriotic American citizens. God grant that this Congress, which has done so little for the country in the way of positive legislation, may not do our own citizens this great wrong and by negation drive our last lingering hope of a merchant marine from the high seas with cold neglect while ample pay is provided in this very bill for like service by the ships of other nations. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERR. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LORE].

Mr. LORE. Mr. Speaker, this is not a political question in any sense of the word. It is purely an economic question, and I do not believe that any one will be terrified by the cry of "subsidy" that gentlemen are disposed to raise in this debate.

If it were a subsidy pure and outright the time has been when Americans even were not scared by the word. It may have been corruptly used, and every honest American rebels at corruption; but by subsidy properly used our American commerce in the past has risen to equal and excel that of the greatest commercial nations of the earth, and no American citizen had reason to hang his head or be ashamed.

Under subsidy we had a line of steamers that once floated upon the Atlantic under the flag of this country—the Collins line—and I well remember how every American's heart beat proudly as we read in the bulletins from time to time that the Collins line of steamers was the pride of the ocean. That was a subsidized line.

To-day, sir, in Philadelphia, right in the very city of my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the only line of American steamers that was owned by Americans and run by Americans has taken the American flag from her mast, and to-day floats the Belgian flag, and is subsidized by the Belgian Government.

Then, if it were a pure subsidy I would not be afraid. The time has come when the American people should not be scared by a shadow of past corruption summoned from the dead past by the able member from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Our merchant marine is a thing of the past and a dream of the future. It has no existence to-day, but we mean as far as we can to take the initiative steps to again rebuild that proud marine. This is a step in the right direction. The proposition before the House is not to subsidize these steamship lines, but to pay an honest compensation for the honest labor they perform. The labor performed is comparable, as stated by the member from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], to the labor of transportation upon your star routes. Would you discontinue the service on every little postal star-route line throughout the country because of the star-route frauds?

Can we not distinguish between fraud and the just and honest application of an appropriation to the needs of a great service, while at the same time we are taking a step in the direction of progress? One promotes industry and builds up the marine; the other dwarfs not only the enterprise, but it degrades the man who is engaged in it. Now let us pay to these vessels, as we pay to the little star routes, a fair equivalent for the services rendered.

The Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, of which I have the honor to be a member, have carefully and honestly considered this matter, not only during this session but in the last session of Congress, in all of its phases. On that consideration we were unanimously of opinion that it was wise and beneficial. It was introduced in the appropriation bill presented by the Committee on Appropriations. And let me say that this is one of the means which will enable us again to float our vessels on every ocean and in every sea, manned by American tars the equals of any in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. HERR. I reserve the balance of my time until I hear from gentlemen on the other side, having the affirmative of the proposition.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to know whether the gentleman has the conclusion. I think the discussion is proceeding under a motion I myself made, and I wish to have it stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that when he took the floor he made no motion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I supposed I had made a motion. It was my intention to do so.

Mr. HERR. I was speaking on my own motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Michigan is the only one pending.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It was my intention to move to further insist. But does the motion of the gentleman give him the right to close the debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan has the only pending motion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN].

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I deem it fortunate that the advocates of this measure, thrust upon the House by the Senate, have pursued the line of debate that has characterized them this afternoon. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JOHN S. WISE] is so much in favor of subsidy that while he claims that this is not a subsidy, he wishes to God it was one. He would thank the Lord if he could get hold of a subsidy with a little firmer grip. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] says that he is in favor of subsidy. And the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY], if I understood him correctly, thinks that he would not back off from it much if it would accomplish certain results.

Mr. FINDLAY. That is true.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman says that is true.

Mr. FINDLAY. Perfectly so.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then we have the whole of the advocacy of this bill emanating from those who say subsidy is right. There is the issue, led on by the gentleman from Michigan who advocates subsidy, justifies subsidy, and the gentleman from Virginia who would thank God if it were more of a subsidy. The issue is squarely presented and gentlemen can meet it as they wish. For one, I do not follow any such lead.

The gentleman from Michigan says he is in favor of passing this because he is in fear of an extra session. In fear of an extra session! That great trepidation and horror seized him long ago; for the very first hour this subsidy made its appearance in this Hall he was one of its earliest and warmest advocates.

Others say they want it in order to build up a merchant marine. Who ever saw the marine of a country made great out of its public treasury? And who here will claim that even if that particular branch of the service could be made great it would be right to rob the widows, the orphans, and the laborers of the land in order to enrich the few who were able to build vessels for the sea?

I remember to have heard the gentleman from Michigan here declaiming most loudly and eloquently against general legislation on an appropriation bill. But when it comes in a form at least questionable if not a subsidy, he can gulp it down without any trouble. It gives him no difficulty to swallow it at all even on an appropriation bill; and we see him turning about-face on the subject of general legislation on appropriation bills.

Now the question is, shall we, because but a few hours more remain of the session, permit the Senate to dictate on an appropriation bill an appropriation of between half a million and a million dollars in a provision which is new legislation? For one, I say no. If it is meritorious, let it come up on its merits. Let us not be terrified into this. If you are terrified into this to-day you may expect to be so to-morrow in something else, the next session in another thing, and it will not be long before the Senate can dictate to the representatives elected directly by the people what shall be appropriated and how the law shall be changed on general appropriation bills.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. I think I have said as much as I intended to say on this subject. We have listened to eloquent speeches; we have heard appeals made to our sentiment as Americans; we have heard appeals made to our desire that American commerce shall be extended and that the ocean shall be whitened with our sails; that we shall have a merchant marine that shall equal that of England. All these appeals have been applauded. I am as much an American as any man living, and it is because I am an American that I do not want my Government to enter on that which will sooner or later corrupt the very halls of its legislation.

There is an easy solution of all this, and it is this: Give to the Postmaster-General $500,000 or $600,000 and tell him to make his contracts with the lowest bidders for carrying the American mails. That is an easy solution of all this. But gentlemen are not willing to do it in that way. They say we must make contracts with certain ship-owners, and we must pay them 50 cents a mile unless some other American ship-owner shall come in and bid under them. And the contention is that we shall give power to the Postmaster-General to make the contracts in that way. And yet gentlemen have got up on the floor and denied that this was a subsidy; they have claimed that it was not a subsidy at all. Why this persistence in pushing and pressing this measure unless it means more than a bare compensation?

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not yield. There is more in this than the payment of a fair compensation for the service rendered. It provides a subsidy.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Something more! Where?

Mr. BAYNE. If it did no more than to provide a compensation gentlemen would not so persistently insist upon it. It does more, it introduces the policy of subsidizing our merchant marine.

Resistance is shown in favor of this measure, and at the same time it is claimed that it is not a subsidy, that it is but a compensation; and yet in the face of these facts gentlemen are not willing to give to the Postmaster-General $400,000 or $500,000 or $600,000 and to say to him, "Make your contracts for carrying the mails on the ocean, and let the contracts out to the lowest responsible bidders." That discloses the fact that a bounty is to be given, which to my mind is a bad policy for our Government to enter on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, following up the illustration of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] with another, let me say that the speculations upon this floor as to what this provision is and whether it is a subsidy or not remind me of Mark Twain's story of the jumping frog. When the stranger first saw the jumping frog he said to the owner of it: "What might that be?" The owner of the frog replied: "It might be a canary; it might be 'most anything, but 'taint; it's a frog." So, sir, it seems to me that all this speculation as to whether this is a subsidy or whether it is a provision for fair and reasonable competition or simply pay for services rendered ends simply in this; that it might be anything, but, as its opponents charge, it is a subsidy; and, as a member of the political party in ascendancy on this floor, I protest against what I consider the misrepresentation of illustrious names in our political history when they are cited here as advocates of the idea of subsidy. Not one word can be found in the speeches or writings of those illustrious men which can even be twisted to show that they favored the principle of subsidy.

Mr. ELLIS. Does not the gentleman know that the Collins line was sustained by a subsidy under Democratic legislation?

Mr. MCADOO. I can not yield now. My time will not permit it. Mr. Speaker, I have read the elaborate report of the distinguished Georgian [Mr. KING] in the Twenty-ninth Congress, and I say to this House that in that report he was simply following out the line of thought of those illustrious statesmen who desired to build up a quasi navy in the then condition and style of war vessels, not to subsidize any commercial lines. Sir, I thought it was a most unfortunate thing for the advocates of this measure to take as illustrations of the benefits of subsidy the Collins line and the line to Brazil. The history of the subsidies to those lines shows this: that you never can, by artificial stimulus, build up American commerce. Our situation and conditions are unfavorable to such a policy. It is in opposition to the genius of our institutions.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is so.

Mr. MCADOO. You stimulated the Collins line with a subsidy, and when you withdrew that stimulus the patient receded into decay and death. France and England give subsidies. Their governments, unlike ours, are not wrenched and strained in principle by so doing. Moreover, their commerce so subsidized has a healthy normal life of its own. It does not exist on the stimulant alone. With them subsidy is correct in principle, and a natural home protection to their own interests.

When you subsidized the Brazilian line you did not add a dollar nor a pound to the value of your commercial relations with that country, and when the stimulus was withdrawn that line went down. American commerce will be built up, but it will never be built up by great public donations from the public Treasury. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allowed me I want to say this additional word. I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. The dignity of this House, which has protested by its vote on two several occasions against this amendment, is at stake. And, as a member of the political party on this side of the House, I would rather see a dozen extra sessions than to yield this the greatest principle that has been brought before the Forty-eighth Congress.

What is the distinguishing feature between government in the old world and government in the new? The great Jeffersonian idea, which the illustrious gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has so eloquently spoken of, is that government is an umpire to see fair play between individuals while they compete on their merits. The old monarchical idea, whose practical fruits some of us so painfully remember, is to have a powerful and paternal government—subsidies for the few, that they may be enriched by the toil, the suffering, and the degradation of the many. Gentlemen have grown eloquent about the American flag being carried into foreign lands by subsidized vessels. It will not be a work of national honor, but, on the contrary, it will be a black stain upon our bright-hued flag when it is hoisted over vessels subsidized with the people's money drawn from the people's taxes, and used to enrich the few who may be the beneficiaries. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY].

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, the proposition we are to consider is whether the House shall concur in an amendment of the Senate which has been placed upon this bill in contravention of the rules of that body and against the will of this House. By the action of the House this subsidy clause was stricken from this bill. By the action of the Senate, contrary to the rules of that body, it was again put in the bill, and we are now called upon to pass upon that amendment made by the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the sentiment which has been uttered here by several gentlemen who have spoken in favor of this amendment—that it would be a matter of patriotic pride that the flag of our country should be saluted upon every sea. But, sir, no amount of subsidy can make that flag float free upon the ocean. The commerce of our country is bound hand and foot by a different idea, which has actuated our Government in its policy for many years—the principle of the tariff, which has prevented, and still prevents, free trade upon the seas. The proposition here is to give to the Postmaster-General the right to contract with American vessels for the carriage of our foreign mails, and those vessels are not to be paid merely for the services they render, but, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has stated, they are to receive a subsidy—the amount of money over and above what is earned in the line of service. To that I am opposed; against that I enter my protest; and if I were a conferee of the House, extra session or no extra session, I would oppose it until the clock struck the hour of 12 noon to-morrow.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to add anything to what I have said to-day upon this subject. There remain to me fifteen minutes, which I am disposed to donate to the House, recognizing its impatience for a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I will say in justice to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] that he has ten minutes left; and I have no disposition to cut him off. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HERR. So far as I am concerned I would be willing to vote; but I promised five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will my friend from Michigan allow me at the suggestion of a colleague to make this statement: Some one has said this bill does not carry any appropriation for foreign-mail service. We have an appropriation in the bill as it left the House of $425,000 for foreign-mail service.

Mr. HERR. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DORSHEIMER].

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Mr. Speaker, in the observations I made this afternoon I suggested it was possible that the service which has been performed between San Francisco and China and Japan could not be performed for the compensation which is now afforded to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

The distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] congratulated this House upon the circumstance (to use substantially his own language) that the country was not dependent upon the will of that steamship company; that there were competitors there ready to perform this service. Now let me say that the ocean service between San Francisco and Asia is performed alternately by two steamship lines, one American and the other an English line. The existing service can not be performed if the American line should refuse to carry the mails, unless the English line should double the number of its vessels now engaged upon the route. Does the gentleman from Indiana suppose that for $3,000 a year the owners of the English line would double their service? And if they would double their service, then I ask how long have we to listen to arguments addressed to this House based upon the idea that foreign countries are willing to perform a part of the functions of our Government? If that argument is to be addressed here—

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. DORSHEIMER. Do not interrupt me. If that argument is to be addressed here, I commend it to the economist of Indiana that he may address himself to a topic worthy of his genius, and in which a substantial saving might be made. I have no doubt that if we made the proposition to England to-morrow she would do the naval service of this country. I have no doubt that if we were to say to England to-morrow, "Come to us and perform our naval service or the service of our Army," England would only be too glad to do both. That would be a saving indeed. The economist from Indiana might then go to his constituents with bright plumes in his helmet, for he could say, "We have delivered the United States from a taxation of $50,000,000 by persuading the foreigner to furnish us our armies and our navies. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERR. I desire to add a word in relation to the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] whether there is not already in this bill money for foreign-mail service. Of course there is; but $325,000 of it goes to foreign ships, and only $55,000 to American bottoms.

Mr. HUNT. That is economy, I suppose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is not that the full estimate of the Department?

Mr. HERR. That is the full estimate. But the gentleman seems to think that it is all right to confine this appropriation in such a way that we pay the bulk of it to other nations.

Now I want to say a word to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE]. He attacks the honor and integrity of men on this floor because, forsooth, we are in favor of some enterprise that somebody else is in favor of.

Mr. BAYNE. I deny that I attacked—

Mr. BOUTELLE. I protest against the gentleman from Michigan being interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan must not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. BAYNE. I deny that I attacked the honor or integrity—

Mr. HERR. Mr. Speaker, he insinuated that everybody—

Mr. BAYNE. I deny that I impugned the integrity of any gentleman on this floor.

Mr. HERR. If I can understand the English language he insinuated that there were improper outside influences that gave undue interest to those who advocate this proposition.

Mr. BAYNE. I said nothing of the sort.

Mr. HERR. I will say, then, that every gentleman about me misunderstood him.

Mr. BAYNE. I said nothing of the sort.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The imputation was plain, distinct, and unmistakable.

Mr. HERR. Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose to yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I merely wanted to protest against this method of attacking everybody who happens to be in favor of anything that is advocated by men who know what they are about and who seek to build up this great country of ours.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Why does the gentleman become so indignant at the imputation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has two minutes.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is hardly worth while to attempt to say anything in two minutes.

Mr. RANNEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina be allowed five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Objection was made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. HERR. I call for the previous question on this vote.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to fifteen minutes of time.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HERR] that the House recede from the disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, on which he demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 98, nays 89, not voting 136; as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now I ask for the reading of the next Senate amendment. There are a number of sections that cover the same object. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of those sections be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Illinois state the amendment he desires the House to act upon, and whether he moves concurrence or non-concurrence?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. They are the last four amendments in the bill but one, those relating to the special 10-cent stamp.

The Senate amendments numbered 17, 18, 19, and 20 were read, as follows:

Strike out sections 3, 4, 5, and 6.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of those sections be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask a further conference.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to have the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] explain the effect of these amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments and agree to the same.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 78, noes 45.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. No quorum. I ask unanimous consent to say a few words. These amendments are not fully understood by the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that debate has been exhausted.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I know it has, but I should like to be permitted to say a few words, that this matter may be understood by the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I appeal to the gentleman from New York to allow us to go on and dispose of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes the point of no quorum. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. McMILLIN, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. SKINNER.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to consent that the gentleman from New York shall be allowed two minutes to explain the amendments.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I was deprived to-day of the privilege of having ten minutes on this question, which I had been promised.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the request of the gentleman from New York is acceded to, will that dispense with the vote by tellers? I am willing to let the gentleman make his statement if that will shorten the time occupied in this matter.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman does not yield his demand for tellers.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will consent that I shall have half the time which was promised me to-day to speak on this question, and which I gave up.

Mr. McMILLIN. Gentlemen all around were insisting, not twenty minutes ago, that we were in danger of an extra session.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Two minutes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Very well; let the gentleman proceed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER]?
There was no objection.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, this provision in the bill is the result of a special recommendation by the President in his last message. It is supported by the recommendation of the Postmaster-General a year ago, and this year by the unanimous opinion of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and, as I understand, by the unanimous action of the Committee on Appropriations in putting it upon the Post-Office appropriation bill. The only objection thus far heard to it has been simply that the Senate did not deem it wise to place it on an appropriation bill. It is new legislation. We have conceded the legislation which the Senate asks; and now let us have this provision, which everybody who will read it carefully will understand is in the interest of every American citizen who desires to reap the full privileges of the postal facilities of this country.

Mr. HERR. I suggest to the gentleman to tell the House what it is.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. It provides that if I desire to send a letter to my home to-night and I know it will reach there at 10 o'clock to-morrow night, I put on it a 10-cent stamp. When it reaches my home office it is taken from the post-office, and 8 cents out of the 10 are paid a messenger to take it to my home immediately. The system costs no man a cent who does not use it. It will not cost the Government a cent. There is a margin for all the expenses; and every man who has studied out this matter gives it as his firm impression that it will yield a handsome revenue to the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Let us have a rising vote.

Mr. McMILLIN. There have been already two votes on the proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will take their places.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 79.

So the motion of Mr. McMILLIN was not agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask a further conference.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. TOWNSHEND, Mr. HOLMAN, and Mr. HERR.

SAM. J. RANDALL,
WILLIAM H. FORNEY,
THOMAS RYAN,
Managers on the part of the House.
W. B. ALLISON,
EUGENE HALE,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. I will endeavor to be as brief as I can in order to explain the difference between the two Houses on this bill. To begin with, I move that the report of the conference committee be accepted, and upon that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof, the report of the conference committee was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUDD. I desire to have read that portion of the conference report relating to amendment No. 59.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not in this report. It is one of the disagreements in the committee.

Mr. Speaker, the bill as it went from the House to the Senate provided for appropriations aggregating $22,200,000, or thereabout; the Senate added about $5,500,000 to the bill. There has been reached an agreement between the two Houses on about $2,250,000 of the amount of the increase. There are now sixty disagreements, which aggregate in amount $3,250,000.

It is not for me to call in question the motives of men, but it is not improper for me to say what is the result of the action of men, and in that connection I can say that the conferees have found themselves in large degree compelled to consent to the increased appropriations, or else to endanger an extra session.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let me ask the gentleman if these amendments were adopted by the Senate with the same amount of consideration that the bill had in the House?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not desire to be interrupted now. The gentleman is often facetious, but his arrow falls short in some cases, and it has done so in this instance.

Thirty-nine of these sixty amendments relate to public buildings which have been added by the Senate, and the appropriations involved in these thirty-nine amendments amount to an increase of expenditure of $1,637,500. The bill as it went from the House to the Senate provided for appropriations for public buildings to the extent of about $1,780,000, so that the Senate amendments practically double the appropriations for public buildings as provided by the House. If it is desired I will give the localities of the public buildings to which I have referred.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Let us have them.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I should like to know the locations.

Mr. RANDALL. The first one relates to the court-house and post-office at Abingdon, Va. The next is the post-office and subtreasury at Boston, Mass. The next amendment relates to the marine hospital at Cairo. The next to the public building at Harrisonburg, Va. The next to Abingdon, Va., there being two appropriations, first for that public building and next to make it fire-proof, which involves two appropriations. The next amendment is to Lynchburg, Va., where a fire-proof building is also required.

The next amendment of the Senate is the provision for Concord, N. H., and the next at Council Bluffs, Iowa; the next at Detroit, Mich.; the next Des Moines; the next Dubuque; the next Frankfort, Ky.; the next is for Galveston, Tex.; the next for Greensborough, N. C.; the next for Hannibal, Mo.; the next for Harrisonburg, Va.; the next for Jackson, Tenn., and the next for Kansas City, Mo. The next provision of this kind is for Marquette, Mich., and the next for Keokuk, Iowa; the next for Elizabeth, Ky.; the next for Macon, Ga.; the next for Peoria, Ill.; the next for Quincy, Ill.; the next for Reading, Pa.; the next for Richmond, Va., and the next for Sacramento, Cal.

Mr. BUDD. Let me ask the gentleman if that is not simply carrying out an act of Congress that has been passed?

Mr. RANDALL. I will come to that in time. The next provision named by the Senate is for a public building at Troy, N. Y.

Mr. BURLEIGH. But that is provided by law already.

Mr. RANDALL. But the Senate have added this amendment to the bill as it left the House. That is what I am referring to. I am not saying that there is no law for it, but simply that the Senate added the appropriation for that purpose and the House and Senate conferees have been unable to concur as to it.

The next public building is at Tyler; the next at Wichita, Kans.; the next at Fort Scott; the next at Montpelier, Vt.; the next at Nebraska City; the next at Wilmington, Del.; and the next at Winona, Minn.

These are the public buildings that are in controversy between the two Houses, and I believe I have named them all.

The next point of difference relates to the site for the post-office in the city of Washington.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The site alone?

Mr. RANDALL. The site alone. The Senate appropriates $640,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. For a particular site?

Mr. RANDALL. For a particular site.

Mr. McMILLIN. If it will not interrupt the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I think they have provided a further contingent expenditure which will bring it up to about $800,000, perhaps more.

Mr. RANDALL. When I come to ask a vote on this site of the Washington post-office there will be an opportunity to debate, and the case will be properly presented.

The miscellaneous items about which there is disagreement relate to the international boundary survey between the United States and Mexico; but I shall temporarily pass that over because the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] will address the House in relation thereto.

The next disagreement is in relation to a provision which was inserted in the House bill as to public buildings:

That hereafter no plan shall be prepared or approved by the Secretary of the Treasury for any public building authorized by Congress to be erected until after the site therefor shall have been purchased and paid for, and he shall not authorize or approve of any plan for any such building which shall involve a greater expenditure in the completion of said building, &c.

Mr. HOLMAN. That last has been stricken out.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not stricken out yet, but I am going to suggest that we recede.

The next disagreement is in relation to a sum of money appropriated in connection with a certain commission which was appointed and sent to the State of Louisiana by Mr. R. B. Hayes.

The next is in relation to the care and preservation of a building on Coaster's Island, which is designed to be used as a school for an advanced course of instruction for naval officers.

The next relates to the training-school on Coaster's Island.

The next relates to the Interior Department building, the completion of the east wing.

The next relates to the construction of a terrace to the Capitol.

The next relates to the same subject in a different form.

The next relates to the construction of a reservoir for hot water on the Government reservation at Hot Springs, Ark.

The next relates to the Tenth Census. This provision was presented in the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox]. It repeals the clause in the original law which obligated the Federal Government to pay one-half the expense of any State census.

The next relates to the removal of the iron fence around the reservation on Pennsylvania avenue between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets.

The next relates to the completion of a commissary depot at Saint Paul, Minn.

The next relates to the completion of a sea-wall on Governor's Island, New York Harbor.

The next two relate to a proposition to erect a statue to the memory of General La Fayette.

The next relates to a clause providing for the purchase of a portrait of General George H. Thomas, by Miss C. S. Ransom, for $10,000.

The last two disagreements relate to the sale of two public buildings, one in Boston and the other in the city of Philadelphia.

The House inserted two provisions, one for the sale at public auction of the United States court-house in the city of Boston, and the other relating to the sale of the post-office property in the city of Philadelphia which is now unoccupied.

I propose first to submit to the House the miscellaneous items, and I am willing that motions may be made to those items, only I desire that debate on the same may be as limited as possible. I will ask the Clerk to read the amendments.

Mr. PUSEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he begins.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] yield?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. PUSEY. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he construes the amendment in relation to the Council Bluffs appropriation as an increase of the appropriation, or is it simply to make $50,000 of the appropriation available.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I will state this in connection with all these public-building appropriations, that when we entered upon the consideration of those thirty-nine additions or amendments to the bill we found it utterly impossible to classify them by any line based upon a principle. They seemed to have got into the bill under every conceivable condition.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. They got in, though.

Mr. RANDALL. They are not in yet.

Mr. PUSEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say in reference to the appropriation for the building at Council Bluffs—

Mr. RANDALL. Will not the gentleman please wait until we reach that subject?

Mr. PUSEY. Yes, sir. I will simply say that if it is an addition to the appropriation we do not want the money.

The Clerk was about to read the amendment numbered 61.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I will not ask to have 61 read, because it relates to a proposition submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], which was reported from the committee, but which, it was subsequently understood, would be changed by agreement. The Senate, however, are not willing, as far as I know, to have anything of that sort attached to the bill, alleging that it is new legislation.

The sixty-first amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike from the bill as passed by the House the following:

"That hereafter no plan shall be prepared or approved by the Secretary of the Treasury for any public building authorized by Congress to be erected until after the site therefor shall have been purchased and paid for; and he shall not authorize or approve of any plan for any such building which shall involve a greater expenditure in the completion of such building and approaches thereto than the amount that shall remain of the sum specified in the law authorizing the erection of such building as the limit of the cost of the site and building after the site shall have been paid for."

Mr. RANDALL. Unless the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] who offered this proposition desires to speak, I will make a motion that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. BUDD. Is it the Holman amendment?

Several MEMBERS. Yes, sir.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

The one hundred and twentieth amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Insert after line 1417 the following:

"National Board of Health: For salaries and expenses of the National Board of Health, $15,000."

Mr. RANDALL. For two years there have been no appropriations made for the support of the National Board of Health. In the deficiency bill, however, the Committee on Appropriations provided for the payment in full of debts which have been created by the board. Notwithstanding the fact that during the current fiscal year and the last fiscal year there have been no appropriations for this board of health, they have incurred certain debts. Last year the House sought to abolish this board, believing that two agencies to accomplish one object were unnecessary and expensive. The Senate declined, however, to accept the legislation proposed by the House in the way of repeal, but concurred with the House in declining to make any appropriation for the conduct of the business of this board.

This year, as I said a moment ago, the Committee on Appropriations provided in the deficiency bill for the payment of all indebtedness thus far incurred by the board. We also attached a repealing clause, the fate of which I am unable to foretell. But the Senate has inserted this clause to continue the National Board of Health, and has made an appropriation of $15,000 to conduct its business. We do not propose that on this matter the House shall recede. We have given $340,000 to be placed under the control of the President to be used in the prevention of epidemic diseases, if the emergency should require the expenditure. As to the continuance of this board of health, we found ourselves disagreeing decidedly with the Senate conferees.

The House conferees—certainly a majority of them, and I think all of them—believed it unnecessary to continue this organization. We considered that this business could be as well performed by a single organization, the Marine-Hospital Bureau. Hence, on behalf of the committee, I move that the House insist on its disagreement as to this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The one hundred and twenty-fourth amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Insert after line 1445 the following:

"To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to reimburse ex-President R. B. Hayes for amount paid for expenses of the commission appointed to go to Louisiana in April, 1877, $3,960.73."

Mr. RANDALL. This matter is well understood by the House. I move that the House insist on its disagreement, and I ask a vote.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I hope the House will insist. I think that President Hayes had no business to send that commission down there to steal away the Packard legislature and give it to Nichols. I think that the thing ought never to have been done at all; and if he thought proper to do it, he should have done it at his own expense.

Mr. RANDALL. I have nothing to say on the question.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The one hundred and thirty-first amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Insert after line 1498 the following:

"For the care and preservation of the building on Coaster's Harbor Island formerly known as the 'asylum,' and the adjoining buildings and grounds; given to the United States for naval purposes by the State of Rhode Island, to be used for an advanced course of instruction for naval officers, and for improvements, furniture, fixtures, heating, lighting, water, and for books and stationery, $11,000; for pay of one clerk to officer in charge of building, $1,000; in all, $12,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Coaster's Harbor Island was presented to the United States by the State of Rhode Island. There is now there a naval training-school; and I suppose the House conferees would not have objected to continuing the appropriations necessary to make that school efficient.

But the amendment which has just been read was considered by a majority of the House conferees as an entering-wedge or incipient step to the organization of a new naval school which might in time grow into a school after the fashion of the Annapolis Academy for boys—this being for officers. It occurred to me at least that officers of the Navy would be best educated at sea rather than on land.

A MEMBER. They might get drowned at sea. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. In the light of this being a new organization of this sort the House conferees dissented from the Senate in this particular, and I ask the House to insist on its disagreement.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to make a motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I will yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island for that purpose.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment and agree with the Senate. The State of Rhode Island, as the chairman of the committee has said, made a gift of this island, which is most eligibly situated for the purpose and more adapted in every respect as a training-school, to the United States for the express purpose that it shall be used as a naval training-school. It is located on the border of the harbor of Newport, accessible by water and having advantages which could be possessed by scarcely any other locality which could be mentioned.

There is nothing peculiar, I submit to the chairman of the committee or the House—in fact it is proposed to have a school for the training of naval officers in the higher and advanced course of training beyond what our Naval Academy affords. It is in consonance with the march of improvement in naval architecture, naval warfare, and naval ordnance and matters pertaining to naval attack and defense. The torpedo station is in the same line of defense. The school for teaching the practice and for experimenting and making torpedoes is located in the same harbor of Newport and is separate from Coaster's Harbor Island only by a small expanse of water in the inner harbor.

It is not peculiar to the Navy alone to have advanced schools for officers: The artillery school at Fortress Monroe is of the same kind.

Mr. TALBOTT. Does the gentleman from Rhode Island think, after the course at Annapolis Academy and two years at sea, it is necessary to have these officers go again to Newport and attend this training-school? If so, I am opposed to it.

Mr. SPOONER. The idea is fully explained in Senate Executive Document No. 68 of the present session, from the Secretary of the Navy, which I ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope not.

Several MEMBERS. Print!

Mr. SPOONER. No; I do not care to print. I am speaking for the purpose of calling the attention of this House to this matter, and I presume I have some right at least to occupy a small portion of the time in making such explanation. I ask to have the document read. I do not care to have the appendix read. The document occupies about a page and a half.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had receded from its amendments numbered 17, 18, 19, and 20 to the bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes. [Applause.]

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPOONER. The document is only a page and a half long, and will not take up much time in its reading.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I believe it should be read, and I also believe this school of practice is a good one.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOBLITZELL. I object.

Mr. SPOONER. Am I not entitled to have it read?

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the reading of it by the Clerk.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I will read it myself. It is not the fault of the great body of this House that the appropriations have been delayed to this late hour. This bill is brought in here without giving any opportunity for discussion.

Mr. RANDALL. We have seven hours.

Mr. SPOONER. That is not my fault.

Mr. RANDALL. Neither is it mine.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think it is the fault of this side of the House. I do not think it is the fault of the great body of the House. Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. How can the gentleman from Rhode Island occupy the time of the House when the gentleman from Pennsylvania is on the floor? I want to know some of these puzzles.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania yielded to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. RANDALL. I yielded, but I only yielded for a few minutes. I want to get along as pleasantly as possible, and I hope the gentleman from Rhode Island will realize the necessities of the occasion.

Mr. SPOONER. That we may start perfectly fair from this point at least, I would inquire whether I did not make the motion now pending and whether I am not entitled to the floor on my own motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moved the House insist and made some remarks upon that motion, and then yielded to the gentleman from Rhode Island who took the floor not in his own right, but during the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. He made a motion of higher privilege than the one I made.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Rhode Island had obtained the floor in his own right the Chair would have recognized him to debate the motion. But that is not the case.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not my motion a privileged one?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WASHBURN. We will gain time by allowing the paper to be read.

Mr. SPOONER. It would have been read before this.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 47.

Mr. SPOONER. No quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that point; otherwise we can not get through with this bill. It will not change the result if the document is read.

Mr. SPOONER. It seems to me that if an important appropriation of this kind is to be stricken out of the bill when the estimates are before the committee, it ought to be done by a quorum of the House, at least.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. There is evidently no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist upon the point of no quorum?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not wish to put the House to any inconvenience or discomfort. I think, however, it is proper to have that letter of the Secretary read, which will give the House necessary information as to the importance of this matter. I desire to be perfectly courteous to gentlemen in charge of this measure, and if it be conceded to me that this letter of the Secretary of the Navy shall be read, and then I am permitted to occupy two or three minutes in addition, I will not press the matter of no quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that if he has an opportunity to read that letter or report that he will not insist further on the demand for a quorum?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states that if he is allowed to have the report read, and then two or three minutes in addition, that he will not insist upon the point.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well; I have no objection.

Mr. SPOONER. And with the understanding also that a vote shall be taken on my motion.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read the report.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 11, 1885.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of a resolution adopted by the Senate on the 4th day of February, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to report to the Senate what, if any, steps have been taken to establish an advanced course of instruction of naval officers at Coaster's Harbor Island, Rhode Island, and the reasons which have controlled the action of the Department."

The subject of an advanced course of instruction of naval officers was, May 3, 1884, committed by this Department to a board consisting of Commodore S. B. Luce, Commander W. T. Sampson, and Lieut. Commander C. F. Goodrich, who on the 13th of June, 1884, made a report recommending the establishment of such a course of instruction in the science and art of military and naval warfare and in international law and history. The method recommended is carefully outlined in the report, a copy of which is annexed to this communication.

As it was deemed advisable that the course of study should be made to supplement the present instruction of naval officers in torpedoes at Newport, R. I., and that the place should be selected where the Department is already in possession of the necessary grounds and buildings, the board recommended the establishment of the college of instruction at Newport.

In pursuance of the previous determination of the Department, and in accordance with the foregoing report, directions were given that preparation should be made for the course of instruction to be conducted at Coaster's Harbor Island, Newport, by General Order No. 335, issued October 6, 1884, a copy of which is herewith transmitted.

The reasons which have controlled the action of the Department are to be found in the recognised necessity for an advanced course of military and naval education in the United States. There are now existing three schools for the purpose in the Army and one in the Navy. The latter is at the torpedo station at Newport, where a class of officers is assembled for a few months in each year for instruction in the art of manufacturing and using torpedoes and torpedo explosives. The constant changes in the methods of conducting naval warfare imposed by the introduction of armored ships, swift cruisers, rams, sea-going torpedo-boats, and high-power guns, together with the more rigid methods of treating the various subjects belonging to naval science, render imperative the establishment of a school where our officers may be enabled to keep abreast of the improvements going on in every navy of the world. The torpedo school only partially fulfills the imperative requirements. The college is intended to complete the curriculum by adding to an extent never heretofore undertaken the study of naval warfare and international law and their cognate branches.

The great surplus of officers in the Navy makes it especially appropriate to require that at all times some of them not needed for actual duty shall be engaged in courses of professional study calculated to improve and qualify them for better service in the future.

In instituting this school of instruction at Conster's Harbor Island, the Department, acting within the scope of its powers, has simply utilized public grounds and buildings, under its own immediate control, for a wise and beneficial purpose, and has detailed naval officers who can readily be spared to constitute the president and faculty of the college.

Very little expense will be incurred in carrying out the Department's plan, while the benefits to be realized by the Navy and the country will be of great importance. The subject is commended to the notice and favor of Congress.

Very respectfully,

W. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say in addition that the building referred to here is already standing on this island, and it is for its repairs and preservation and for furnishing the same for use as a naval training-school that this appropriation is desired and was recommended.

I regret to have been obliged to submit this matter to the attention of the House at a time when I know it is weary of this long-continued session; and yet members who have given attention to the brief statement of the Secretary which has just been read must understand now, if they did not before, the desirability, I might say the necessity, for this appropriation for fitting our naval officers for modern naval service. It is in that line that this matter looks, and that this training-school is expected to aid and educate the officers of the Navy. I particularly ask the attention of the House to it now; and request that this very meritorious appropriation, less than the amount submitted, amounting in the aggregate to but $12,000, for the preservation of the building and the repair of a building which was a gift to the Government from my own State, shall be considered, and that the amount herein named be appropriated. I therefore ask a vote on my motion.

Mr. RANDALL. The House should not confound this appropriation for the training-school with the other proposition. They are two distinct amendments.

Mr. SPOONER. Why not confound them? How do they differ?

Mr. RANDALL. Because the next amendment relates to the training-school. This amendment relates to an institution for the higher education of the officers, and not an institution about to be established there.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not understand that there is anything more than a mere quibble of words in that. This is a training-school. I move, therefore, that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 37, noes 48.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The next amendment (numbered 132) was read.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I want to say to the gentleman from Rhode Island that I think there can be a substantial result reached with reference to this amendment. I therefore ask a formal non-concurrence and that the House further insist upon the disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The next amendment (numbered 36) was read.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House further insist.

The motion was agreed to.

The next amendment (numbered 140) was read, as follows:

Strike out of the House bill the words:

"For constructing terrace north of the Capitol, section marked B, as shown on printed plan accompanying the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury (Executive Document No. 9, first session Forty-eighth Congress), including wages of mechanics and laborers, $21,500."

Mr. RANDALL. The House was ready to appropriate a sum of money to complete the northern or Senate end as far as this terrace was involved. We prefer to see the completion of the work before we begin at the Senate end. The proposition, however, of the Senate includes the completion of the north end and part of the completion of the west. It involves a much larger sum. I move, therefore, that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Insert the following:

"For continuing the construction of the terrace and grand stairways of the Capitol, as shown on plan accompanying the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury (Executive Document No. 9, first session Forty-eighth Congress), including wages of mechanics and laborers, $350,000; and this appropriation shall be immediately available."

Mr. RANDALL. This is of the same tenor as the other to which I have just referred, and I ask non-concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. ROSECRANS. That work ought never to have been begun.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to this amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I think the gentleman is entirely correct on that proposition. The idea of appropriating $350,000 to be expended for labor around this Capitol is simply a waste of the public money in the main, as we have seen it here year after year. Especially is this appropriate in view of what was done awhile ago when a bill to pay the small claims running from twenty dollars to two or three hundred or four hundred dollars, known as the 4th of July claims, which have been passed upon by the accounting officers of the Department, the loyalty of the claimants in each case fully proven, the amount of the claim satisfactorily established, and the Treasury Department having undertaken the investigation as well as the House committee and a report made by the gentleman from Tennessee, and yet these claims receive no consideration simply because of objection coming from members on that side of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I am glad to know that the gentleman from Kentucky agrees with me on this point.

I now move to further insist on the disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment (numbered 142) was read, as follows:

To construct a reservoir for hot water on the Government reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., in order to provide for an adequate supply of hot water for the Army and Navy Hospital and bath-houses, $30,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate numbered 166 was read, as follows:

Strike out the following:

"Tenth census:

"That the twenty-second section of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the taking of the tenth and subsequent censuses,' approved March 3, 1873, be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Mr. RANDALL. In the original law there was a provision made that where States in intermediate years undertook to take a census of their citizens the United States Government should pay one-half the expense. This clause was inserted at the instance of the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Census Committee of the House. That gentleman has told me that the repeal of this clause in the original act would save a very large sum of money to the Government of the United States, running into one or two million dollars.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How?

Mr. RANDALL. The Government of the United States by the original act agreed to pay one-half the expense of any State census that might be taken.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Do you like that partnership?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not. I am a State-rights man, and I wanted the States to do this at their own expense.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate numbered 173 was read, as follows:

Strike out the following paragraph:

"That the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds may, on the approval of the Secretary of War, cause to be removed the iron fences surrounding the reservations on Pennsylvania avenue between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets."

Mr. RANDALL. This side of Fourteenth street on Pennsylvania avenue is a reservation that is surrounded by iron railings. It is practically useless as a place of resort. And as the general current of sentiment in cities is to take down railings and throw open such squares for public use the committee desired that that should be done there. The Senate object. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the paragraph in line 1998 which reads:

For construction and repair of iron fences, $500.

Is that still in the bill?

Mr. RANDALL. That is the general fund to repair any of the iron fences that surround the reservation.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Now, in regard to amendment numbered 173, to which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has called the attention of the House, if I understand it correctly the provision proposed to be stricken out is intended simply to remove an iron fence surrounding the reservation between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; the reservation facing the National Theater.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. What I want to say about this is that it strikes me there is an incongruity in the two propositions.

Mr. RANDALL. Not at all. If the gentleman will pardon me for a moment I will explain.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. What we ought to do is to remove all of these iron fences. No cattle or swine are allowed to run at large. These fences are unsightly and ought all to be removed. The botanical grounds are hidden from the view of visitors by the fences surrounding them. Franklin Square, one of the most beautiful squares in the city, has an iron fence surrounding it which ruins the whole effect. For proof of this you need only go to Farragut Square, and the one beyond that toward Georgetown, to Iowa Circle, to Lincoln Park, and others failed in by those costly iron fences. I suggest that we strike out the paragraph at line 1998:

For construction and repair of iron fences, $500.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not now before us.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Then I move to amend the amendment which is before us by providing that the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds may, on the approval of the Secretary of War, cause to be removed the iron fences surrounding the reservations within the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL. I would not like to agree to that without the approval of the officer in charge of those reservations.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. There are the Agricultural grounds which are far more decorated and more beautifully laid out than the Botanical grounds. The grounds in the Botanical Garden nailed in by these fences are in a slipshod condition and have an air of neglect about them. They look like a cheap diamond in a poor ring.

Mr. RANDALL. I admit that the general current of feeling as to these high iron fences in the large cities is changing and they are being removed, but there is no way of accomplishing that just now, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not see why we should not make this amendment. This is to remove the fences from the little flat-iron park near the theater. Why should not the direction be made general?

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing that the gentleman should test the sense of the House on his amendment.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky please state what is his amendment?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out after the word "reservations," in line 2020, the words "on Pennsylvania avenue between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets" and insert "in the District of Columbia."

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will have to make his motion in these words: "That the House agree to the Senate amendment with the further amendment" which he proposes.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the suggestion. I modify my motion in that way, and the effect of my amendment would be to leave it in the discretion of the Secretary of War. As amended it would read:

That the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds may, on the approval of the Secretary of War, cause to be removed the iron fences surrounding the reservations within the District of Columbia.

It is obvious this action is needed.

But it is needed just as much in front of the market. It is needed more in these Botanical grounds, and it is needed as much in Franklin Square and some other squares. We want to beautify this city. That is what we appropriate the money for. We have landscape gardeners who lay out the grounds beautifully, and then we fence in those grounds with these high fences and walls, although no animal is allowed to run at large that could do them any harm.

The motion of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, that the House recede from its disagreement to this amendment and agree to the same with an amendment proposed by him was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL moved that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The next amendment (numbered 193) was read, as follows:

Quartermaster and commissary depot at Saint Paul, Minn.: For the completion of the public building for a quartermaster and commissary depot at Saint Paul, Minn., to be used as offices for officers of Department of Dakota, and for heating the same, $50,000.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the Senate amendment. This building at Saint Paul is nearly completed. It is designed as a quartermaster and commissary depot. The people of Saint Paul gave the site; about $60,000 has been expended upon the building; it is a four-story building, and the amount named in this item is required to complete it and put in the heating apparatus, &c.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that we had better let that go into conference again.

Mr. BUDD. Mr. Speaker, I desire at this time to move that the House concur in this provision with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. I will say that it makes no difference whether this amendment comes in at this place or in connection with any other provision for a public building. The amendment is to appropriate the sum of $350,000 for the purchase of a site in San Francisco for a post-office and court-house. It is unnecessary to state that the amount proposed to be appropriated for that purpose is less—

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that that amendment is not germane to the bill, and the gentleman had better withhold it for the present.

Mr. BUDD. Then I withdraw it for the present.

Mr. RANDALL moved that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The next amendment (numbered 194) was read, as follows:

For purchasing hospital and other records of the war pertaining to the New England Soldiers' Relief Association, $5,500.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The next amendment (numbered 195) was read, as follows:

Sea-wall at Governor's Island, New York Harbor: For sea-wall around Governor's Island, $40,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The next amendment (numbered 196) was read, as follows:

For the purpose of erecting a statue, with suitable emblematic devices thereon, on one of the public reservations in the city of Washington, to the memory of General La Fayette and his compatriots, $50,000.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the remarkable language of this paragraph, which provides for the erecting of "a statue, with suitable emblematic devices thereon." Does that mean General La Fayette tattooed or otherwise ornamented? The idea seems very imperfectly expressed.

Mr. RANDALL. The House conferees were not aware that the Committee on the Library had ever considered this subject or had had an opportunity to view the plans, and in that condition of the case conferees on the part of the House not intending any disrespect whatever to the memory of General La Fayette, but, on the contrary, being deeply sensible of the great service rendered to the United States by that distinguished man, they yet felt that they would prefer that the House Committee on the Library should have something to say in relation to this matter.

Mr. McCOMAS. My only desire was to call the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the rather peculiar language of this paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not responsible for the language. It is a Senate amendment. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend so as to provide for the erection, not of a statue, but of a charitable institution for inebriates.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, that amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I think the RECORD will show that when the bill was brought in and read through here under a suspension of the rules, I called attention to the fact that there were enormous appropriations in it.

Mr. RANDALL. I am quite sure that the gentleman from Kentucky does not desire to put me to any personal inconvenience.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No more than the gentleman and the other members of the committee and the rest of his friends have put me to.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not aware that I have ever put anybody to personal inconvenience in this House.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. This bill should have been reported a month or six weeks ago.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, well, if the gentleman does not appreciate my courtesy I have nothing further to say.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to erecting a statue to the memory of La Fayette; not that I do not love his memory, not that I do not appreciate the services he rendered to our country, but because I believe that to build a monument to anybody in this age when there are thousands and millions who can not get bread, when there are thousands of children that are not educated, that are not properly clothed, when there are millions of people in the United States who can not read or write—and I do not mean the colored people alone, for there are thousands of whites who can not read or write—I say, sir, that at such a time and in such a condition of things it would be better and wiser to offset some of the evil, to alleviate some of the suffering that humanity is heir to in this free land by erecting and maintaining charitable institutions rather than follow the example of the barbarous and half-civilized nations of the past in erecting these costly monuments.

Look at the monuments in this city. Look at the monument to Farragut; does any one feel proud of that? Look at the statue in McPherson Square; does any one who has ever studied a horse think that is a proper representation of a horse? There ought to be written under it, "This is a horse."

A MEMBER. That would not be true.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend this amendment so as to read, "For the purpose of erecting a charitable institution for inebriates on one of the public reservations in the city of Washington, to the memory of La Fayette and his compatriots, $50,000." If that amount is not enough, let some future Congress supplement it. Thus you will build an appropriate monument and one which the intelligent people of this country will appreciate far more highly than they will that pseudo-monolith sticking out of the mud of the Potomac Flats.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. RANDALL, it was agreed to.

The one hundred and ninety-seventh amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Insert the following after line 2413:

"That the Secretary of War, the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, and the Architect of the Capitol are authorized to contract for and erect the said statue, and to designate a suitable public reservation in the city of Washington as the site for said statue."

Mr. RANDALL. We propose in this case the same action as in the other; they may go together.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the House will further insist on its disagreement to this amendment of the Senate.

There was no objection.

The one hundred and ninety-eighth amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Insert after line 2418:

"To enable the Joint Committee on the Library to purchase the portrait of General George H. Thomas by Miss C. S. Ransom, $10,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to this amendment, and on that motion I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. The next two amendments, the twelfth and the forty-ninth, can be considered together; and I presume it is not necessary to read them. One of the provisions which the Senate strike out relates to the sale of public property in Boston at a minimum price of $325,000. It is provided that if the Secretary of the Treasury should deem this price too low he may appoint a board that shall fix the minimum price. A similar provision is made in relation to the old post-office building in Philadelphia, $300,000 being fixed as the minimum in that case. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to these two amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. The fifty-ninth amendment is the one proposing the purchase of a site for a new post-office in this city. The amendment is in several sections, the first being as follows:

That in order to provide additional accommodations for the Post-Office Department and an eligible site for a city post-office, the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of the Treasury, acting as a board, be, and they are hereby, empowered and instructed to acquire, as hereinafter provided, the several parcels of real estate embraced in square numbered 406 of the said city, bounded by F street on the north, E street on the south, Eighth street on the east, and Ninth street on the west, at a cost all told not exceeding $640,000; and for such purpose that sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield for a few moments to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE], a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who have considered this subject.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there was any difference at all in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in regard to this matter. The Senate amendment is identical in its terms with a Senate bill which was referred to our committee, and which met with our unanimous disapproval in several of its features. We disapproved of this measure on two grounds, first, as to the amount; second, as to the frame of the bill (independently of the amount), for we believe it would allow opportunity for involving the Government in an unlimited expenditure in spite of the limitation named in the bill.

The amount proposed to be expended is $640,000. We had a report on this subject from an informal committee appointed jointly by the Senate and House Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds; and we had the assurance of this committee that the whole of this property could be bought for $500,000 and perhaps for less. We also had the letter of a part owner to the same effect. The committee generally agreed that this was the maximum limit to which the Government should go.

In relation to the manner in which the measure is framed, it provides in the first place for the absolute purchase by parcels of about two-thirds of that square—not quite two-thirds; and authorizes certain prices according to a schedule and set of bids made by certain owners of property or their agents. The area of that square is 60,000 square feet; the area to which these offers apply is a little less than 40,000 square feet—less than two-thirds. The exact area is 38,725 square feet. The bill undertakes to provide that the total cost of the square shall not exceed $640,000, yet it authorizes an expenditure of $538,500 for 38,725 square feet, leaving only $100,500 to buy more than half as much as the portion which is to cost $538,500.

Furthermore, the schedules and estimates which are incorporated in this bill differ from each other in several important particulars, including the dimensions of the lots, as mentioned in the schedule and the offer, respectively. No lawyer who has been in practice six months would consider a contract with this discrepancy as giving a binding and clearly defined agreement for a good title. No business man would act upon any such offer in his private affairs.

As to the other third part of the square we are informed that a portion of it is owned by minors, and another portion is church property. This third part embraces about 20,000 square feet; yet, without any positive assurance that the remainder of the square can be bought at a reasonable price, it is proposed in this measure to purchase the two-thirds, which is offered, parcel by parcel, and pay for it out of the Treasury. The result would be that after the Government had spent $540,000 it would own detached pieces of property scattered through this square, while as to other pieces, and in one instance where a party offers one piece he reserves another piece, the Government would be at the mercy of these owners. These are the reasons, briefly stated, why the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds by a unanimous vote repudiated this plan of legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. I will yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRAINERD] also a member of the committee.

Mr. BRAINERD took the floor.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. Do not let us debate this any longer, but let us vote. We are as ready to vote now as at any other time.

Mr. BRAINERD. I desire to oppose it, and I will not occupy but a minute or two. This provision which has been put on the sundry civil appropriation bill by the Senate ought not to be passed. I am fully satisfied of that from an investigation of the case, and our committee have fully investigated in reference to this property and considered it in all its aspects and we framed a bill providing for the purchase of this property for a sum not exceeding $500,000. That bill has been introduced and is now pending in this House.

On reliable information furnished to us this property can be purchased for $500,000 or less. I am informed its assessed value is a little over $300,000. In my judgment, if this purchase is authorized by Congress on the basis of $640,000, at least $140,000 of it is money that will go into the hands of private speculators, and for one I am not willing the Government shall be placed in the power of speculators under the provisions the Senate have introduced into this bill. Under those provisions this property would cost this Government an unlimited amount. The mode of acquirement of title in itself is sufficient to satisfy this House before the title shall be completed to that entire square, as contemplated by the purchase, it would cost this Government far above $1,000,000 instead of $640,000.

Mr. BUDD. I move to adhere. I do not think this ought to be sent to conference. If there ever was a job stuck into a bill this is the job.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the question will be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House insist on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER, of California. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by adding to the last Senate amendment, appropriating for public buildings, an amendment providing an appropriation of $350,000 for the purchase of a site for a post-office in San Francisco.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rose in time to move an amendment about the property between F and E and Ninth and Tenth streets.

The SPEAKER. The House has passed away from that subject.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I think the Chair will agree with me that instead of buying this piece of property, it would be better to amend so that the Pennsylvania Railroad should be compelled to keep out of the public grounds, and we should take that building and turn it into a city post-office.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not germane. I ask the House further to insist on its disagreement to the fourth amendment, which relates to the international boundary surveys between Mexico and the United States. I should like that to go into the conference for some sort of adjustment.

The SPEAKER. It has not been read.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it has been read.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the vote be taken as a whole on the various propositions relating to public buildings, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I have been on the floor addressing the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has made a request which the Chair has not stated to the House. The gentleman asks the House to vote as a whole on propositions relating to public buildings.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. If that is acceded to, gentlemen might still offer their amendments.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to have a separate vote on amendment 62.

The SPEAKER. If gentlemen will indicate the amendment on which they ask for a separate vote, time will be saved.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I desire separate votes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks gentlemen to indicate all propositions on which they desire separate votes.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I desire to move an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is objected to.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the sixth amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For court-house and post-office at Abingdon, Va.: For completion under present limit, $25,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. What is the population? What is the necessity for it?

Mr. RANDALL. I think about 3,000, but I am not certain. I want to test the sense of the House whether they want any other buildings added to the million seven hundred thousand dollars which the Senate have passed.

Mr. BUDD. I think it will facilitate business if I can—

Mr. RANDALL. I will make a statement. If the House want additional buildings they can vote down the previous question. If the House wants there shall be a concurrence in all these propositions of the Senate they can take that vote. I demand the previous question. If that is voted down, then I am no longer in charge of this subject.

The SPEAKER. Of this particular amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I did desire to have a single vote on these thirty-nine separate amendments which relate to the public buildings.

Mr. BUDD. I desire to make a statement to gentlemen of the House. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his demand for the previous question a moment—

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to lose the floor.

Mr. BUDD. I will not take you off the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing to listen.

Mr. BUDD. In these amendments added by the Senate, and which you say contain additional appropriations for buildings, it will be found that some have already passed by separate bills in both Houses and have become laws. There are certain bills which have passed the Senate and the House, for instance the bill for the Sacramento post-office, providing that a post-office shall be erected there. But the bill is inoperative. It seems that in some of these bills the appropriating words have been omitted by some oversight, and consequently what is claimed as an increase or addition by the Senate is simply an appropriation to carry out laws that have been enacted. That is the reason why I ask to have a separate vote expressly upon that particular amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman make that motion as to all these separate amendments?

Mr. WASHBURN. I will amend my motion, and move that the House recede from all its disagreements to these amendments with an amendment.

Mr. BUDD. I must demand a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. That has been already demanded.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House further insist on its disagreements to the amendments of the Senate, and on that demands the previous question. Pending that motion the gentleman from Minnesota moves to recede from the disagreements and agree with an amendment, which is in order and not debatable pending the demand for the previous question. The gentleman will state the amendment.

Mr. BUDD. I want to say that a separate vote will be insisted on in this case.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me for an amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. Without waiving the right to call the previous question on the pending motion, I want to yield a moment to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER].

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I wish to offer an amendment, but I prefer that a vote shall first be taken on the motion.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes on said bill, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL managers at said conference on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana if he desires recognition.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, my colleague, is that the House disagree to all of these amendments, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. That was objected to, and a separate vote demanded upon each.

Mr. BAYNE. Then I ask the attention of gentlemen a moment. In the interest of harmony and the dispatch of the public business, I ask that unanimous consent be given that a vote be taken on all these amendments put in by the Senate at one time, and then if that is voted down, that gentlemen desiring to offer amendments shall have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. CASSIDY. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I again make this suggestion: Let us take all of the amendments but the last in one motion, and that can be used as a basis for offering amendments up to a reasonable hour.

Mr. BUDD. No, sir; I will object to that.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that if the House will permit a vote to be taken on all the amendments except the last proposition, then that proposition can be submitted to a separate vote, and if the House desires further amendments all they have to do is to vote down the previous question.

Mr. BUDD. Why can not that be done on the first amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I want to expedite the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BUDD. It will expedite it just as much if the vote is taken on the first amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I think not.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if it be true as alleged that the Senate has amended this bill by adding some four millions of dollars for public buildings?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; not so much.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. About what is the amount?

Mr. RANDALL. In the neighborhood of $1,600,000.

Mr. POLAND. Excluding the post-office here?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I reserve the right to offer an amendment to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not reserve the right when the previous question is demanded.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I submit to my colleague that he should allow an amendment—

Mr. BUDD. I insist upon the regular order. The Speaker has decided that the vote must be taken separately when demanded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question. The House divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 19.

Mr. BUDD. No quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask to lay aside this report and take up the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BUDD. Regular order.

Mr. KEIFER. Can not this business be laid aside by a conference report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this is a conference report.

Mr. KEIFER. The conference report has been adopted. This is outside of the report—extraneous to it.

Mr. WASHBURN. It seems to me the whole matter can be arranged satisfactorily in a moment if gentlemen will hear a proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. I will submit a proposition. I am willing that these amendments may be offered, provided that gentlemen who offer them if they are voted down will not take advantage of the fact to require a quorum.

Mr. LEWIS. I am willing.

Mr. CASSIDY. And I shall not object.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. That is exactly what I want. I have been wishing to get a vote on a bill of mine for a long time.

Mr. BUDD. I want to understand the question before giving my assent. This relates to any amendment that may be offered to this bill?

Mr. KEIFER. I have a little bill here.

The SPEAKER. Any amendment that would be in order under the rules of the House would be in order if the agreement should be concluded. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. That is but a part of the system upon which this bill has been passed.

The SPEAKER. That is not a matter to be discussed now.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I want to say I yield none of my rights to call a quorum, if I believe at any time a quorum ought to be demanded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects to the arrangement proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I do not understand the gentleman from Kentucky to object. He merely stated his own position.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I stated I would not bind myself not to demand a quorum simply because gentlemen have bills that they want to go into this bill with the other buildings which some members of the House through influence with the House committee have put in, and which some members of the Senate have put in, having gone one better through members of the Senate committee. I do not propose to be bound by any agreement that shall prevent me from exercising my right to demand a quorum if I should think it necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] to object practically to the proposition I have made. I therefore ask to postpone the consideration of the sundry civil bill so as to enable the report of the committee of conference on the naval appropriation bill to be made.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the amendments which the House is now considering are not part of a conference report, and that the consideration of those amendments may be interrupted by a conference report, which is privileged under the rules of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I present the conference report on the naval appropriation bill. And I will say that I desire to take the naval bill back into conference as quickly as I can.

Mr. BUDD. I desire to state at this point for the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and others who may have misunderstood me that all I asked was that gentlemen who had amendments might have the right to offer them.

Mr. RANDALL. I have been generous in the highest degree, but I have been met by an objection which prevents me from proceeding with that part of the business which relates to the sundry civil bill. I have asked that the consideration of that bill be postponed until I can secure a quorum here to test the sense of the House on the Senate amendments.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report sent up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8259) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

W. HUTCHINS,
SAM. J. RANDALL,
JOHN D. LONG,
Managers on the part of the House.
EUGENE HALE,
P. B. PLUMB,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have order and I will make a statement to the House. The real difficulties as to the naval appropriation bill are not so great as the general disagreement reported by the conference committee would seem to indicate. There are but four or five real points in controversy about which the conferees on the part of the House and of the Senate do not seem at present to be able to agree.

The first relates to the $400,000 appropriation in reference to what is known as the wooden vessel New York, at Brooklyn, N. Y.

The next is the proposition of the Senate for the construction of two cruisers, which shall be from 3,000 to 5,000 tons displacement, and to cost $1,100,000, exclusive of the armament.

The next is as to a heavy gunboat of about 1,600 tons displacement, at a cost not exceeding $520,000 without the armament.

The next is as to a light gunboat of about 800 tons displacement, to cost about $275,000. And in this connection I will say the difficulty arose in the conference whether that board which now exists, known as the naval advisory board, should be given anything to do with the construction of the vessels to which I have just referred. The armament for these four vessels is appropriated for in the Senate amendment to the extent of $500,000.

The next is as to the item inserted by the Senate appropriating $2,000,000 for the commencement of work on the double turreted monitors, which will cost to complete, as is well known by all of us, $4,250,000.

Then again there is a proviso requiring that the purchase of the armor contracted for shall be free to open public competition. Not a word is there said as to domestic material.

The next difficulty is as to what is known as the Ericsson Destroyer, to which the conferees on the part of the House decline to assent.

In view of the proposition as to the two cruisers and as to the heavy gunboat and the light gunboat there was submitted a proposition in lieu of the one providing for the construction of the four vessels which I have named.

Mr. TALBOTT. Was that offered by the House conferees?

Mr. RANDALL. I offered it as one of the House conferees, and I believe I would have had, if the Senate conferees had assented, the concurrence of one of my associates, perhaps both. I do not know as to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG]; he can speak for himself. I ask the Clerk to read that proposition.

The Clerk read as follows:

These vessels are to be constructed of steel of domestic manufacture, having as near as may be a tensile strength of not less than 60,000 pounds to the square inch and a ductility in eight inches of not less than 25 per cent. Neither of the vessels hereby authorized to be built shall be contracted for or commenced until full and complete detail drawings and specifications thereof in all its parts, including the hull, engines, and boilers, shall have been made and approved by the Navy Department. And after said drawings and specifications have been made and the contract entered into for building the same they shall not be changed in any respect, when the cost of such change in the construction shall exceed $500, except upon the recommendation of the chief constructor and the engineer in chief in writing and with the approval and upon the written order of the Secretary of the Navy. And if changes are thus made the actual cost thereof and the damage caused thereby shall be ascertained, estimated and determined by the Navy Department through the proper bureaus; and in any contract made pursuant to this act it shall be provided in the terms thereof that the contractor shall be bound by the determination of the Navy Department as to the amount of the increased or diminished compensation said contractor shall be entitled to receive in consequence of such change or changes.

In the event that the whole or any part of the vessels provided for are built by contract, such building shall be under contract with the lowest and most responsible bidder or bidders, made after at least sixty days' advertisement published in five leading newspapers, inviting proposals for constructing said vessels, subject to all such rules, regulations, superintendence, and provisions, as to bonds and security for the due completion of the work, as the Secretary of the Navy shall prescribe. And no such vessel shall be accepted unless completed in strict accordance with the contract: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall utilize the national navy-yards, with the machinery, tools, and appliances belonging to the Government there in use in the building of said ships or any of the parts thereof as fully and to as great an extent as the same can be done with advantage to the Government: And provided further, That at the same time that he shall advertise for proposals for contracts for the construction of said vessels, he shall cause estimates to be made of the cost of their construction in the navy-yards, which estimates shall be sealed and opened only on the day when the bids for contracts are opened, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that the work of construction can be better and more economically done in the navy-yards, he may with the approval of the President reject all bids and cause the work to be done in the navy-yards.

Mr. RANDALL. The view of certain gentlemen, whom I need not more particularly describe, was that these vessels should be confined in their construction to private contractors and that the navy-yards should have nothing to do with them; such being alleged to be the tendency of the popular mind. There was also the idea put forth that the navy-yards could not compete with private contractors in consequence of the eight-hour law, which it was said gave the private contractors an advantage of about 20 per cent. to begin with. But as one of the conferees I thought it would be an advisable provision, as it would prevent in some degree a combination against the Government among the few private contractors who construct these vessels, and that, as a means of preventing such combinations, we might bring in the Department to bid against them.

There was not much controversy as to the number of vessels to be built, but there was controversy as to whether we should place these two new cruisers, as provided in the Senate amendment, again under the control of the advisory board, and it was finally thought that that would be nothing more nor less than duplicating the cruisers now in the course of construction. In addition, one of the conferees desired that one of these vessels might be of such dimensions as would compare favorably with any battle-ship that is now afloat, and to that end it was desired that the restriction as to tonnage displacement which is provided for in the Senate bill should be fixed at between 3,000 and 5,000 tons and should be extended so that it might reach as high as 8,000 tons. I have stated the difficulties that presented themselves, but I think that perhaps an effort should be made to reconcile those differences by another conference, and for that purpose I ask that this House non-concur and ask a further conference. I yield now to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, it is at this hour hardly worth any one's while, and I doubt if it is the wish of the House, to discuss at length the merits of the questions which are involved in this bill. The issue that is now before us is a practical one. If it be desired to escape the necessity of an extra session for the purpose of passing a naval appropriation bill one of two things must be done, as I am satisfied from my experience in conference during the last three or four hours. Either this House must make up its mind to agree to the following propositions: First, that the limit for repairs of wooden ships shall be 20 per cent.; second, that it is not worth while at present to enter upon the completion of the wooden ship New York; and third, that in moving for an increase of the Navy we adopt the general principle of empowering the Secretary of the Navy and the new administration to construct two cruisers, ranging from 3,000 to 5,000 tons displacement, together with one heavily armed gunboat and one lighter armed gunboat; leaving the character and description of the cruisers and gunboats to be determined by the incoming authorities—either this, or, on the other hand, we must lay aside all idea of an increase of the Navy during the present year and content ourselves with simply agreeing upon a bill which will pay the wages of the officers, sailors, and marines, keep the ordinary bureaus going, and let the incoming administration and the new Secretary of the Navy consider during the summer the whole general question of the increase of the Navy and report to the next Congress. These are the two plain practical alternatives that present themselves. It is a waste of time now to discuss the question of iron cruisers or wooden ships and all that.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Are those propositions demanded by the Senate?

Mr. LONG. If the gentleman will excuse me, I can not in terms say that they are. If they were I should not have the parliamentary right to say so. But I have stated the simple, plain question. I repeat it again, if we desire to avoid an extra session so far as this matter is concerned let us agree on a bill (and I am sure we can) to provide for the current force of the Navy, or let us agree to an increase of the naval force in the general manner embodied in the Senate amendment to this bill, which is iron ships instead of wooden, and no more repairs at great expense of our wooden navy. And, coming now to the details of the proposition of the Senate embraced in this bill, it is by no means a harsh or narrow one.

What is the proposition? It is: First, that there be appropriated money for the construction of two cruisers of not less than 3,000 or more than 5,000 tons displacement. That is all the limitation that is provided in the bill as to these two vessels. All the rest is left to the responsible head, the Secretary of the Navy, and to the President, his superior. It goes without saying that in the construction of these two cruisers the best talent will be sought, the best designs and plans obtained, all the advantages of modern invention—speed, security, power, armament, all secured. Second, a heavily armed gunboat of about 1,600 tons displacement. Third, a lighter gunboat of about 800 tons displacement. As to these gunboats also no other limitation than their size and general description and cost is placed on the responsibility of the Department, except as follows: And, further, "authority is hereby given for the construction of said four vessels, at not exceeding the total cost for each above specified, in accordance with such final plan as may be determined upon, after a revision and reconsideration of all designs which have been heretofore made."

Not necessarily, it will be observed, to construct them at once, but leaving ample time for the Secretary to consider and mature the best plans. He may, if he pleases, take a whole year to consider and mature them, but after he has determined upon the plans then the vessels are to be constructed "in the manner and in conformity to the conditions and limitations provided for the construction of the new cruisers in the acts of August 5, 1882, and of March 3, 1883."

Those acts very carefully guard the contracts for the construction of these gunboats and cruisers. It is true that these acts require the advice of an advisory board, and I certainly should desire, so far as that advisory board is concerned, that that part of these acts should be waived in the construction of these vessels.

On this basis I believe we shall find elsewhere a readiness to unite with us cordially in putting it within the power of the new administration to construct these additions to our Navy varying in their type and size as described, with a large discretion conferred upon the new Secretary of the Navy, a discretion which certainly ought to be satisfactory to the incoming administration and to those who support it.

A MEMBER. What about the monitors?

Mr. LONG. With regard to the monitors I can only say, from such observation as I have had, that the consideration of them was not specially reached. While I believe they should be completed, and when completed will form a most important part of our harbor defenses, I do not believe the question of their construction at this particular time should or will stand in the way of an agreement between the two branches. I do think, however, we must make up our minds to abandon the idea of spending money on wooden vessels, either in the excessive repair of old ones or in the completion of the New York, and also to increase the navy in the manner proposed by the Senate, giving this large discretion to the incoming administration, and holding it to strict responsibility. Either there must be an agreement upon that basis, or else an agreement can undoubtedly be had upon a bill—if the Democracy care to go to the country on that—which shall simply appropriate money enough to keep the present navy going in a perfunctory way. The practical thing certainly for us to do at this precise moment of time is to insist and ask for a new conference.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. To go back into conference and agree on something.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. TALBOTT addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has called the previous question. Does he yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection; but the gentleman will bear in mind that only five hours of this session remain.

Mr. TALBOTT. And I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will bear in mind that the Committee on Naval Affairs has been ignored in this whole arrangement.

Mr. RANDALL. On the contrary, we have conferred constantly with individual members of the Naval Committee, and particularly with its chairman. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. TALBOTT. Five minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations brought into this House some new legislation looking toward the reconstruction of the navy and the building of new vessels. That legislation was ruled out by the Chair on a point of order. An amendment was offered by myself making an appropriation for the only vessel that was authorized to be constructed. The Senate has struck out that provision and inserted some amendments. I wish to say that the amendments adopted by the Senate for the construction of the steel cruisers and their armament are substantially in accord with what the Committee on Naval Affairs believe to be right.

Mr. McADOO. Except as to the monitors.

Mr. TALBOTT. I am only speaking of the steel cruisers. The Committee on Naval Affairs has a right to be heard on this question. I am not antagonizing the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. All we ask is that this legislation be concurred in.

I agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to competition in the work of construction between the navy-yards and the contractors. I had prepared such an amendment myself, and had suggested the matter to some members of the Senate. An amendment of that kind, which will bring about competition between the bureaus of the Navy Department on the one hand and naval contractors on the other ought to be adopted. Now I ask the Committee on Appropriations to comply with the demand of the country and begin the reconstruction of a navy. That is all the Committee on Naval Affairs ask, and I am satisfied from what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has said that he concurs in desiring this object.

I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO].

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Speaker, both the Senate and the House are agreed that these cruisers should be built. I think the House will agree—I know this portion of it will—as to the monitors. Now we can have these cruisers; we can have them constructed to be the equals of the Esmeralda, the finest type of her class of vessel; and they can be built by the incoming administration; they can be built this year. I sincerely hope that the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to which I agree in every particular, will be adopted by the House and sent to the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on seconding the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next question is upon accepting the report of the committee.

The report was accepted.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and ask a conference.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it in order to move to concur in the amendments of the Senate?

Mr. RANDALL. I have moved the previous question.

Mr. THOMAS. That can not cut off the motion to concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to concur is in order, and it takes precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. THOMAS. At the solicitation of the gentleman having this bill in charge I withdraw my motion, so that the bill may go to a further conference.

The question being taken upon the motion of Mr. RANDALL that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and ask a further conference, it was agreed to; and the Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. HUTCHINS, Mr. RANDALL, and Mr. LONG as the conferees on the part of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 347) to provide for printing additional copies of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs on investigation of national homes for disabled volunteer soldiers.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the naval appropriation bill, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HALE, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. BECK.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I again ask to resume the consideration of the sundry civil bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair). That is the pending question before the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that these gentlemen may be allowed to have their measures voted on. I want a vote on all but the last.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to non-concur except as to the last amendment of the Senate.

Mr. BUDD. I move that the House concur in all but the last.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the same understanding shall be carried out as to a quorum and the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUDD. That is understood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that yeas and nays are not to be ordered on the point made of no quorum.

Mr. CASSIDY. What sort of amendments are in order?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Will the Chair state the proposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposition will be distinctly stated, so it may be understood. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, except the last one. The gentleman from California [Mr. BUDD] moves to concur in all but the last. The question is first on the latter motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 62.

Mr. RANDALL. I must ask for tellers to emphasize the vote. I have no means of getting the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RANDALL and Mr. WASHBURN were appointed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 838) granting a pension to Mrs. Lydia S. Huggins;

A bill (H. R. 1615) for the relief of the heirs of the late Langley B. Culley;

A bill (H. R. 1710) granting a pension to George W. Bean;

 A bill (H. R. 2377) granting a pension to James Stockton;

 A bill (H. R. 8082) granting a pension to Lina J. Stearns; and A bill (H. R. 8189) granting a pension to Mrs. F. M. Norton.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

The House divided on Mr. BUDD's motion to concur in all the amendments but the last.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 53.
 So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The last amendment of the Senate will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sixty-sixth amendment of the Senate:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and internal-revenue and other Government offices, at the city of Winona, Minn. The site, and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $100,000: Provided, That the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than fifty feet, including streets and alleys; and that no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Minnesota shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same; during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to have the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Is it intended that the question shall be taken on this amendment which has just been read?

Mr. RANDALL. That is the pending amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON rose.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I now move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. I raise the question of order upon that paragraph of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment—

Mr. THOMPSON. I made the point of order before that was offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the point of order; but will first state the condition of the question.

The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that the amendment just read by the Clerk must have its first consideration in a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CASSIDY. That is contrary to the agreement. We have agreed to allow all amendments to be offered and every amendment to be voted on.

Mr. RANDALL. But gentlemen should discriminate. If this bill is loaded down no one can answer for it. I think the House had better not load it down or be unreasonable in its demand. An hour or two will be all the time that this bill can be kept away from the Senate.

Mr. CASSIDY. The agreement entered into by unanimous consent provides that all proper amendments shall be in order and be voted upon.

Mr. GOFF. That is the agreement.

Mr. CASSIDY. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the pending question. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same with an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

For court-house and post-office at New Albany, Ind., purchase of a site for erection of building, $100,000.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to amend the amendment by inserting what I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that if amendments are to be offered in the ordinary manner as provided by the rule it would lead to confusion.

Mr. CASSIDY. It was expressly stipulated that all these should be in order, although no agreement was made as to how they should be presented.

Mr. RANDALL. Let a vote be taken on each one separately as it is offered.

Mr. CASSIDY. I do not want to limit that to two or three amendments which may be offered under the rule, but to allow all the amendments to be offered that are in order and take them up seriatim to consider them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Ohio insists upon his motion, the Chair could not entertain or receive any more amendments until the motion is put to the House and determined.

Mr. CASSIDY. But that is not in accordance with the order of the House.

Mr. BUDD. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUDD. The Chair is deciding a point of order before it is raised.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California will allow the Chair to state the question.

Mr. BUDD. But I claim that the Chair is deciding a question that is not raised.

Mr. CASSIDY. I submit that all the amendments on this subject should be sent to the Speaker's table or to the Clerk's desk and be considered as pending amendments under the order of the House, to be disposed of in their order.

Mr. RANDALL. But I desire to have a separate vote upon each.

Mr. CASSIDY. I submit to that, but every amendment that is pertinent to this bill should be presented at the Clerk's desk, and must be in order under the agreement.

Mr. BUDD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say, so that there may be no misunderstanding, as we are now proceeding by unanimous consent and by agreement, that a vote is to be taken upon these amendments in the House—

Mr. COSGROVE. I object to any other unanimous consents.

Mr. BUDD. It was understood that these propositions were to be voted on, each one separately and in order, to carry out that consent. When one is voted on then another one will be in order immediately, whether there be half a dozen pending or only two.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair of course must state the recognitions as to who shall offer these amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky raises the question of order, which he will now state.

Mr. THOMPSON. The point of order I make is that each of these amendments must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman made the point of order upon the Senate amendment, which was not subject to that point of order for the reason that it had been under consideration by the House for some time and was a part of the report which had been considered and without objection.

Mr. CASSIDY. It is too late to make the point of order upon it at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. KEIFER. It is too late to make the point of order upon any of them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has considered the Senate amendments, and that question, the Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky, is now beyond the reach of the point of order. The House only divided the question, the first part of it having been considered and agreed to on a separate vote. The Chair will entertain a point of order upon the proposed amendments as they are submitted to the House.

The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment to this bill and agree to the same with an amendment, which the Clerk has reported.

Mr. RANDALL. On that I ask the previous question.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, as soon as that amendment was read and before the gentleman offered an amendment I made a point of order upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair distinctly stated that the amendment was in order and the gentleman from Kentucky made the point of order upon the Senate amendment, which had been under consideration.

Mr. THOMPSON. As soon as it was read I made the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But it had been considered before and was simply a part of a divided question. It was not subject to the point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in order, but the gentleman from Kentucky has made a point of order, which is pending.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And I ask that this amendment may be pending.

Mr. THOMPSON. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I desire to state the situation of the bill which I have asked to incorporate as a part of this proposition.

Mr. THOMPSON. I make the point of order on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order upon the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CASSIDY. I submit that under the order of the House all proper amendments were in order to this bill.

Mr. BUDD. By unanimous consent.
Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. And they can not be ruled out on points of order.

Mr. KEIFER. No; they must be taken up for consideration in the House under the order of the House.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] makes the point of order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] on the point of order.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I submit that the point of order does not lie against this bill because it has been in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and been favorably reported. Besides that, it was not raised in proper time.

Mr. CASSIDY. That is not the point. We made a stipulation that all amendments were to be in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I think if we have quiet and gentlemen will agree to take their turns we will get along a good deal faster.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A point of order has been raised by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON]. The Chair desires that gentleman to state now what is his point of order.

Mr. THOMPSON rose.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has risen to state his point of order.

Mr. THOMPSON. The point of order I make on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is that it makes an appropriation of money, and must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. KEIFER. Under what rule?

Mr. THOMPSON. In the second place, if, as the gentleman from Indiana says, this has been already considered and passed upon in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, then it is the substance of another bill which has been passed upon by the House and it can not be put upon this bill.

Mr. KEIFER. That will not apply to my proposition.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. The amendment I have offered is not the substance of a bill pending before the House in any sense.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not understand that any amendment is pending except that of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. KEIFER. The Chair held that my amendment was in order as an amendment to the amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the consideration of the pending bill be postponed for the present, to give the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] an opportunity of presenting a conference report, which is always in order.

The SPEAKER. That is in order. The conference report can interrupt this proceeding.

Mr. CASSIDY. But what we are now considering is a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill has been agreed to. The House is considering certain amendments to the bill.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES. I present the report of the committee of conference on the deficiency appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8255) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for prior years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

1 That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 8, 9, 15, 16, 21, 28, 38, 39, 42, 45, 50, 63, 67, 69, 74, 76, 79, 80, 84, 85, 87, 89, 180, 198, and 199.

2 That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, 12, 13, 17, 19, 20, 23, 24, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 40, 41, 43, 44, 46, 47, 48, 49, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 66, 68, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 78, 81, 82, 83, 86, 88, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 121, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 181, 182, 183, 184, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, and 200; and agree to the same.

3 That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

After the word "depository," where it occurs in said amendment, insert the words "at Tucson, Arizona."

4 And the Senate agree to the same.

5 That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$15,000."

6 And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of said amendment insert the following:

"The Attorney-General of the United States is required to investigate the judgments and awards against the United States arising under an act of Congress entitled 'An act to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin,' approved March 3, 1875, and to report to Congress at the next session whether the liability of the United States therefor is established and what amount is justly due thereon."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named insert "$25,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "certified" the following: "during the current fiscal year;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "certified" the following: "during the current fiscal year;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the words "thirty-five" the following: "during the current fiscal year;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "certified" the following: "during the current fiscal year;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered from 115 to 119 inclusive, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following: "To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of their respective Houses borne on the annual or session rolls on the 3d day of March, 1885, including the Capitol police, one month's extra pay, at the compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

After said amendment insert as a new paragraph the following: "For one page in the Clerk's office, under resolution of the House of December 3, 1884, from March 4 to December 7, 1885, at $2 per day, $556."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert the following: "five thousand dollars; said sum to be payable on the draft of the chairman of said committee in sums not exceeding $1,000 at any one time;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 185, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert the following: "including all such claims readjusted up to February 14, 1885, $178,451.23;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES N. BURNES,

JOHN D. LONG,

Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,

W. B. ALLISON,

F. M. COCKRELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BURNES. I move the adoption of the report, and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chair to state the question that is before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). The House will resume the consideration of the amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill; and the Chair desires to have a distinct understanding as to what was the agreement on that subject.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say that unless this bill goes from the House by 8 o'clock this morning it will fail.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to know what the agreement was with regard to the amendments to this bill—whether they were to come up subject to the point of order or whether they were all to be submitted and voted upon.

Mr. BUDD. They were to be submitted and voted upon, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to state the agreement that was made. Was each amendment to be voted upon as it came up?

Mr. RANDALL. Each.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, the RECORD will show the fact, but I say now there is not a word or a letter in the RECORD or the Journal that precludes the point of order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, when these amendments are offered they must be considered under the rules. The rules are not suspended.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear it as soon as order is obtained.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to ask the Chair to state to the House the question now pending before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was about to state the question, but it depended somewhat upon whether the Chair could entertain points of order upon amendments offered to this bill. If points of order were to be made upon those amendments then the pending question would be upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON], but if points of order were not to be raised and each amendment was to be voted upon as it was offered then of course the Chair would overrule the point made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, my understanding was that these propositions were to be voted upon separately, but the RECORD and the Journal will show whether there was any reservation of points of order. That does not depend upon any member's statement.

Mr. CASSIDY (to Mr. RANDALL). Then that was an unfair proposition. We agreed upon our side that we would not raise points of order, and now—

Mr. RANDALL. I have raised no point of order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is never unfair to stand by the rules. Mr. CASSIDY. Well, if gentlemen are going to quibble about this they can not pass this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair submits to gentlemen that unless they observe order no business can be done.

Mr. CASSIDY. But this is a special rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). There seems to be a misunderstanding on the floor of the House as to what the order was. The present occupant of the chair was not presiding at the time this agreement was made, and will therefore ask the Clerk to read that part of the proceedings which relates to this subject.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Before that is done I desire to say a word. I insist again, as I have before repeatedly, that the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky was made too late.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that it was agreed by unanimous consent that amendments were to be offered and voted on separately.

Mr. BUDD and others. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the opinion of the Chair that the words "voted upon separately" were intended to allow amendments to be submitted upon their merits.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. CASSIDY. That is all we want.

Mr. McMILLIN. I insist that there never was any such agreement, and never could have been.

Mr. CASSIDY. The understanding was that we were to vote on these questions; and every proposition was to be voted on upon its merits.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated that these amendments were to be voted upon—not ruled out of order by the Chair; therefore he will entertain them. They must be voted on separately; therefore the Chair will not entertain any motion to amend one proposition by adding to it another.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I was recognized by the Chair and offered an amendment to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. KEIFER. That was after I had offered my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that these amendments must be voted on separately. Hence it is not in order to move one as an amendment to another.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What becomes of the amendment to the amendment which the Chair recognized as submitted by myself?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry; whether debate is cut off on these amendments?

Mr. RANDALL. The previous question is operating.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER], who moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment just read and agree to the same with an amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For a court-house and post-office at New Albany, Ind.: For purchase of site and erection of building thereon, $100,000.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. STOCKSLAGER, there were—ayes 56, noes 26.

Mr. WELLER. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. It was agreed that the point of "no quorum" should not be raised.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The agreement was that no point of order should be made.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether there has been an agreement that the rules of the House shall be suspended.

Several MEMBERS. Certainly.

Mr. WELLER. I know of no such proceeding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was unanimous consent that the point of "no quorum" should not be made.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. And that the yeas and nays should not be called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] is agreed to.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUDD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous amendment was adopted; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the motion to reconsider will be regarded as made and laid on the table in all these cases.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and agree to the same with the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. KEIFER. My amendment is pending and should now be submitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can make no difference to any gentleman whether he be recognized now or later. The Chair under this order will recognize all gentlemen desiring to offer amendments. The amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. RAY] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with commodious fire-proof vaults, for the accommodation of the post-office, pension office, the United States courts, internal-revenue office, and other Government offices, at the city of Manchester, in the State of New Hampshire. The site, and the building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $200,000: Provided, That no money to be appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site shall be vested in the United States, and the State of New Hampshire shall have ceded her jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than fifty feet, including streets and alleys. That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended for the purpose provided in this act.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by making it $100,000.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I wish to say a word.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I made an inquiry a few moments ago of the Chair whether this amendment was open to debate.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question.

Mr. CASSIDY. Everything has been waived.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Did the order of the House cut off debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood they were not to be debated.

Mr. CASSIDY. There was to be no demand for a quorum, and no yeas and nays insisted upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must construe this order to accomplish what it was intended to accomplish, and debate would defeat that purpose.

Mr. McMILLIN. I call for the reading of that part of the Journal which pertains to this understanding.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CASSIDY. No appeal is in order under the new rule of the House.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I rise to a point of order. I insist that members on the floor shall take their seats, so as to let us have a chance to know what is going on.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not wish to take unnecessarily a single minute of our precious time this morning in making an appeal to the House. To load this bill up means the defeat of this bill and an extra session.

Mr. CASSIDY. I make the point of order that everything was waived except the single proposition of voting on amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If gentlemen wish to have amendments to the bill considered they must observe the rule of the House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It must be apparent to every gentleman on this floor that this method of offering amendments and loading this bill down will lead to its destruction.

Mr. CASSIDY. That is the order of the House, if the gentleman will permit me to inform him, which was unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a question of order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I did not rise to a question of order, but to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CASSIDY. The gentleman is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is not in order.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I rose to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair that these amendments were not open to debate. If these amendments are to go on it means an extra session. I ask gentlemen not to insist upon it. If there were three or four or half a dozen I would not say a word, but there are not twenty minutes left, and the large number here can not be voted on in an hour. Having said so much, I will not insist on my appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know if there is a new rule which prohibits any member making the point of no quorum, or demanding the yeas and nays, or offering other amendments or substitutes. If so it precludes the House from doing that which our conscience and our judgment dictate in the interest of our constituents. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CASSIDY. That is the new rule. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is operating under special agreement and the Chair is proceeding to carry it out.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 43.

Mr. WELLER demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered—not one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and agree to the same with the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase at private sale, or by condemnation in pursuance of the statute of the State of Kentucky, such lot or lots of land in the city of Lexington, in the State of Kentucky, as he may consider necessary as a convenient and proper site for a public building, and to cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults extending to each story, for the use and accommodation of the post-office, internal-revenue offices, and other Government offices in said city; the site and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $150,000; and for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $150,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, and the State of Kentucky shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. I move the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon, at the city of Springfield, in the State of Ohio, a substantial and commodious public building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office, internal-revenue office, pension office, and for other Government uses. The site and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $100,000; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of at least fifty feet, including streets and alleys; and for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States; and the State of Ohio shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

Mr. KEIFER. This bill passed the Senate, as I am informed, without opposition.

The amount proposed to be appropriated will be more than realized from the net revenues of the post-office at the city of Springfield, Ohio, within the time it will require for the erection of the building. I can not give the exact population of this city, but some estimate may be made from its voting population.

At the last November election the aggregate vote cast in Springfield was 7,905. The population of the city may from this be fairly estimated at about 40,000.

The gross post-office receipts for the year 1884 was $56,205.93, and the net revenue for same year was $37,204.67, although the letter-carrier system is maintained there.

The number of money-orders and postal notes issued in 1884 was 11,824, and the amount received for the same was $104,477.24.

The number of money-orders and postal notes received and paid in that year was 38,203, and the amount of the same for same time was $178,377.24. Registered letters to the number of 21,068 were received in that year.

Carriers delivered 2,577,073 pieces, collected from boxes 1,123,482 pieces, and handled 3,700,555 pieces in 1884.

The number of letters and postal cards dispatched was 2,338,344, and of pieces of second, third, and fourth class matter was 6,777,751.

This large amount of revenue received from and the immense business done at the Springfield office shows the necessity for having good and ample accommodations for mail matter, clerks, letter-carriers, &c. Springfield is a rapidly growing city both in population and business. In seven years the business of the post-office has increased more than 100 per cent. The population of the city is only a part of the post-office patrons, for there is a thickly settled region all around it.

Mr. Chairman, the rent paid or required to be paid for a suitable post-office and other Government offices at this place would more than pay the interest on the cost of the building.

The city of Springfield has had no appropriation for anything at any time, nor has any part of my district; but it has paid in internal-revenue, in net post-office revenue, and in other ways large sums into the United States Treasury.

Springfield is in the Miami or Mad River Valley, the richest portion of the United States, and it is rapidly becoming a great interior city. It is a manufacturing city. Above 50 per cent. of all the reapers and mowers made on the continent are made there.

There is also manufactured there grain-drills, corn plows and drills, thrashers, hay-rakes, turbine water-wheels, sewing machines, and numerous other articles in common use throughout the United States. Many things manufactured there are sold in Europe and South America.

It will be economy to erect a suitable public building at Springfield, at a cost for site and building not exceeding $100,000, and I hope no person will object to this bill.

Mr. WELLER. I move that amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. KEIFER. This, a city of 40,000 inhabitants— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WELLER. I submitted a motion that this amendment do lie on the table.

Mr. CASSIDY. By unanimous consent we waived every motion of that kind in the agreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that would not be in accordance with the agreement. The motion of the gentleman, if adopted, would take the amendment and the bill itself to the table.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 53, noes 42.

Mr. THOMPSON. I make the point of order that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. CASSIDY and others. That point of order can not be made.

Mr. THOMPSON. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to make a statement to the House.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not waive the point of no quorum on this question; I insist on it.

Mr. CASSIDY. But that can not be made, it having been expressly waived by unanimous consent in the agreement.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the calm attention of the House for a few moments. I desire to say with perfect respect to every member here that this is a most unseemly procedure at this late hour in the session. We are proceeding in a manner that if persisted in will inevitably prevent the sundry civil appropriation bill from becoming a law, thereby forcing an extra session.

It is being endangered by the demands of individual members for public buildings. [Applause.] I therefore ask gentlemen to cease and let me get possession of this bill that I may get it to the Senate, secure a conference, and avoid an extra session. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to a question of order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. RANDALL. I have given all of the time that could have been allowed to these different amendments. The Senate, as I am informed, will have to have its desks removed and changed in other respects with reference to furniture so as to provide for the inauguration ceremonies; and I beg of gentlemen here to let me have possession of the bill and cease offering these amendments.

Mr. BUDD. I desire right here to rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. We are taking up more time in this than would be occupied in adopting the amendments.

Mr. BUDD. I desire simply to state to the House in a very few moments one or two facts. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. THOMPSON. The point of order I make is that no quorum has voted.

Mr. KEIFER. That point of order can not be made under the agreement.

Mr. CASSIDY. I submit that no such point of order can be raised except upon two questions.

Mr. THOMPSON. If I can have the ear of the Speaker, and if the Speaker can hear me, I will try to state the point of order. Upon the last vote the Speaker announced 53 voting in the affirmative and 43 voting in the negative. I rose at once and demanded the presence of a quorum before that amendment should be adopted.

Mr. CASSIDY. But the House has already provided by unanimous consent substantially that no such point should be raised.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Constitution of the United States provides that this House can not discharge its duties unless there is a quorum on the floor, if any member shall demand it.

Mr. TALBOTT. The Constitution implies that when a motion is agreed to by unanimous consent it is supposed that every member is present.

Mr. THOMPSON. The whole House can not do away with the requirements of the Constitution.

Mr. WELLER. I would like to know if members of this House can override the Constitution.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to read from the Constitution—

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to suspend the rules to concur in the amendments thus far inserted, and that a conference be appointed on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. CASSIDY. Well, you will have to get a quorum.

Mr. BUDD. I rise to a question of personal explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This question is not debatable.

Mr. BUDD. I understand I have the right to take the floor at any time on a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentleman moves to suspend the rules and agree to the amendments thus far incorporated on this bill, and ask a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. RANDALL. This is the only relief I can get so as to secure control of this bill to get it to the Senate in time.

Mr. BUDD. On that motion I demand a second.

Now, if I can get two minutes to make a brief explanation I shall not press that demand.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be heard for two minutes.

Mr. BUDD. I will not occupy longer than that. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. THOMPSON. Can not the gentleman be heard for two minutes?

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. BUDD. I withdraw the demand for a second.

Mr. CASSIDY. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. CASSIDY and Mr. RANDALL were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; but before the announcement of the result of the vote,

Mr. CASSIDY withdrew the demand for a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not claim that time at present.

Mr. BUDD. I repeat, I will not occupy two minutes of the time of the House if it will give me its attention. I desire to state that this morning I asked the House to allow a vote to be taken on a bill which has been on the Speaker's table for nearly a year. That bill was unanimously passed by the Senate. I requested that it might be voted upon as an amendment to this bill. We went into this matter by common consent; there was no objection to it, and we passed other amendments.

There were certain agreements made on the floor solemnly that have been broken. I was on my feet at the first moment and offered an amendment, and members of this House went to the Speaker pro tempore and got him to recognize them, members who had not thought about it till after my amendment was offered.

A MEMBER. That was clever.

Mr. BUDD. And it was honorable, I suppose the gentleman will say. All I have to say is, that I understand this matter ought to be expedited and I want it expedited. The gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to get this matter to the Senate. He is the gentleman that demanded a separate vote upon each of the amendments. Let these amendments be considered as in the bill. But strike out the San Francisco post-office bill then, if you can, and I will not say a word about it.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER rose.

Mr. BUDD. I am not objecting to the amendment of the gentleman. I make this proposition to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. Let all amendments offered be sent to the desk and be considered as in the bill, and if the gentleman wants to strike out San Francisco, and can do it, if I get a vote thereon I will not say a word. I do not wish to filibuster longer. We have now secured the $100,000 appropriation for the Sacramento public building, as well as other needed appropriations, and California has now over half a million appropriated by this bill. I ask the gentleman will he accept my proposition. It is in his power to strike these amendments out in conference, if the Senate conferees will agree and he does not wish an extra session. It is a fair proposition.

A MEMBER. You mean to strike them out in the conference.

Mr. BUDD. Yes; if you can. I mean the new amendments. Or take them all in if you do not want an extra session. We are putting the question of extra session or no extra session on the shoulders of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman accept this proposition?

Mr. RANDALL. I will accept nothing.

Mr. BUDD. Then you can take the responsibility of the extra session.

Mr. RANDALL. What I want is to get this bill through, and the men who are standing here preventing this bill going to the Senate simply because they want to secure public buildings are the men who will have the responsibility of an extra session, if there should be one.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. It is the gentleman himself who is preventing the bill going to the Senate.

Mr. BUDD. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who was it that stated in my hearing on Saturday that he did not want a session on Sunday?

Mr. RANDALL. I did not want a session on Sunday, and did not vote for it.

Mr. BUDD. You did not want a session on Sunday?

Mr. RANDALL. That is what I say; and I am on record.

Mr. BUDD. And I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania who, on Monday night, broke the quorum but himself? And who forced this bill through the House without debate?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California will discuss the subject before the House under the rule.

Mr. BUDD. I was trying to make an agreement that would not be broken. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if he wants this bill put through, whether he will take the bill and strike out these buildings. I want to get to a vote on the San Francisco bill. I have been working hard for it. It has been on the Speaker's table for a year. It passed the Senate unanimously, yet it has not had a hearing here. My colleague, after deferring long to parliamentary etiquette and usage, has for a long time been working hard for its passage, as have I. It was understood and unanimously agreed in open House to-night that we should have a vote on this San Francisco building. If we had a vote it would pass surely. We offered it first of all these amendments. It should have been first in order of recognition. This was due it.

But the temporary chairman [Mr. SPRINGER] has persistently refused to recognize my colleague [Mr. SUMNER], who has the measure in charge. Influential members have gone to him and got him to overlook the demands of San Francisco and to ignore the fact that this amendment was first in the hands of the Clerk and should have been first in order. We have no remedy. The Speaker pro tempore may recognize whom he will. Give us a vote according to agreement, then in conference you may vote on striking out.

Mr. KING. Why strike them out after you put them in?

Mr. BUDD. If he can.

Mr. KING. And so prevent the passage of an act required to meet the necessities of the Government.

Mr. BUDD. I shall not force an extra session, as most of my objects have been accomplished, and I would not be justified in obstructing further. I have no fault to find with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], who is now working to prevent an extra session, nor the permanent Speaker [Mr. CARLISLE], who has been over-indulgent to our interests. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask a vote on my motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] declines to use his time. The gentleman from California who controls the time in opposition reserves such portion of his time as he has not used. Unless that gentleman yields for further debate there is nothing now in order but to take the vote. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to suspend the rules and that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendments that have been amended in the House, insist on further disagreement on those not yet disposed of, and ask a committee of conference.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. RANDALL, Mr. FORNEY, and Mr. RYAN.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the legislative appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments numbered 1 and 29 of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

W. S. HOLMAN,

J. G. CANNON,

Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,

H. L. DAWES,

F. M. COCKRELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. The House is aware that two of the Senate amendments are still undisposed of. The one involves a mere matter of form and a question of computation; the other amendment, numbered 29, appropriating $39,400 for clerks for Senators, involves the only substantial question presented by the conference report and by this disagreement.

At so late an hour, Mr. Speaker, I hardly feel justified in asking for a further conference; for I could give no assurance that it would result in anything else than a disagreement. And yet, sir, I am disinclined for myself to move a concurrence in the Senate amendment. I think that with more time to go upon than we have, or upon a bill of less importance, I should still insist upon a further conference. I leave the matter with the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of this conference report.

A MEMBER. Who makes that motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. The report leaves the amendments for action by the House. It proposes no action; it simply reports the facts.

Mr. HOLMAN (after a pause). Mr. Speaker, if no other motion is made, I shall move that the House still insist.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now to move to concur in the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, although wholly and utterly opposed to Senate amendment 29, yet, in view of the danger of an extra session, I now move that the House recede from its disagreement to that amendment and agree to the same.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I certainly hope, Mr. Speaker, that another year we may not have to vote on this matter three or four times.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the pending Senate amendment No. 1, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read. The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed in the amendment numbered 1 insert "$344,113.10."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. That will require the action of the Senate; but I suppose no conference will be required upon it, as it involves merely a matter of computation. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 1 and agree to the same with the amendment just read.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX SALES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8236) relating to sales of real estate for taxes in the District of Columbia. I move to take it up with a view of moving that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments and accede to the request for a committee on conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as the conferees on the part of the House the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. FOLLETT, the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. WILSON, and the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. McCOMAS.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to concur in the following—

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let it be read.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I object to its being read.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This is a joint resolution authorizing the President to open communication with other nations with a view to establishing unlimited coinage, with silver a full legal tender.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I think the time for objection is after the resolution has been read.

The SPEAKER. A gentleman can announce that he will object to taking up a bill, and can also object to the reading of a bill.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take up the bill (H. R. 1146) to provide for the erection of a public building at Annapolis, capital of Maryland.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, I move to take up the bill (H. R. 1341) for the relief of John W. Blake.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The regular order is called for.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to suspend the rules to pass this joint resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is in order. The Chair would entertain such a motion unless the point of order were made against it, but if the point of order were raised the Chair would be obliged to sustain it, because there are other matters now pending before the House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules to take up and pass the following resolution—

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, and other members. Regular order.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the following resolution, which I will read— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the regular order is demanded on both sides of the House.

Mr. WELLER. Gentlemen object who have not even read this joint resolution or heard it read. Do they object to having it printed in the RECORD?

Mr. ENGLISH and others. Yes! Yes! [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. DUNHAM. Let us have a call of the House. I think it is perfectly proper that the people should know which of the members of the House attend to their duties here.

Mr. CASSIDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass a bill which involves only $170.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. CASSIDY] is perfectly aware that objection is made to all such requests and that the regular order has been demanded by several gentlemen. If the Chair should continue to recognize gentlemen to make requests by unanimous consent when the regular order is demanded, the demand for the regular order would amount to nothing whatever.

Mr. CASSIDY. If the demand for the regular order is made, that is all right; but I did not observe that anybody was insisting upon it.

The question was taken on the pending amendment of Mr. PETTIBONE offered yesterday (Tuesday) to the motion that the House should take a recess until 10 o'clock p. m. on that day.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 4, noes 25.

Mr. WELLER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point is made that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 4, noes 16.

Mr. PETERS. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll. Before the names of the absentees were announced,

Mr. HOLMAN said: I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH, of Missouri). Before the Chair announces the result of this roll-call he will recognize the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD], who desires to submit a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. LAIRD. Would it be in order for me to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House bill 1737?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. LAIRD. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1737) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for the purpose of reimbursing persons, and the grantees, heirs, and devisees of persons, who, under the homestead, pre-emption, or other laws, settled upon or purchased lands within the grant made by an act entitled "An act for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas Railroad and Telegraph," approved July 23, 1866, and to whom patents have been issued therefor, but against which persons, or their grantees, heirs, or devisees, decrees have been or may hereafter be rendered by the United States circuit court on account of the priority of said grant made in the act above entitled, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as shall be required for said purpose, is hereby appropriated: Provided, however, That no part of said sum shall be paid to any one of said parties until he shall have filed with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of the said decree duly certified, and also a certificate of the judge of said court rendering the same to the effect that such a decree was rendered in a bona fide controversy between a plaintiff showing title under the grant made in said act and a defendant holding the patent or holding by deed under the patentee, and that the decision was in favor of the plaintiff on the ground of the priority of the grant made by said act to the filing, settlement, or purchase by the defendant or his grantor; and said claimant shall also file with the said decree and certificate a bill of the costs in such case, duly certified by the clerk and judge of said court. Thereupon it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the amount due to each defendant on the basis of what he shall have paid, not exceeding $3.50 per acre for the tract his title to which shall have failed as aforesaid, and the costs appearing by the bill thereof. He shall then make a requisition upon the Treasury for the sum found to be due to such claimant, or his heirs and devisees or assigns, and shall pay the same to him, taking such release, acquittance, or discharge as shall forever bar any further claim against the United States on account of the failure of the title as aforesaid: Provided further, That when any person, his grantees, heirs, assigns, or devisees, shall prove to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that his case is like the case of those described in the preceding portions of this act, except that he has not been sued and subjected to judgment as hereinbefore provided, and that he has in good faith paid to the person holding the prior title by the grant herein referred to the sum demanded of him, without litigation, such Secretary shall pay to such person such sum as he has so paid, not exceeding $3.50 per acre, taking his release therefor as hereinbefore provided.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that an amendment to come in at the end of the bill may be read, and I hope the gentleman will accept it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall only extend to actual and bona fide settlers on the lands above specified and who settled on such lands prior to the said decision of the Supreme Court touching the title of said lands, and shall only entitle such settlers to the compensation already provided for to the extent of the lands so actually settled upon, not exceeding, however, one hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust this amendment will be accepted.

Mr. LAIRD. Very good; I will accept it.

Mr. BENNETT. I have been for some time on the floor to object to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] asked unanimous consent to present the bill which has just been read. After the reading of the bill, without objection, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] offered an amendment; and the question is now on that amendment.

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand the Chair to hold that my objection will not now be entertained?

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

Mr. BENNETT. I rose in my place and hallooed at the Chair for the purpose of making this objection.

Mr. DUNHAM. I submit the Chair is not a telephone to be hallooed at.

Mr. BENNETT. Heretofore without exception—and I want to speak within bounds—when a proposition of this sort has been made the Chair has said "The bill will be read subject to objection." I rose for the purpose of availing myself of the benefit of that custom. I am here now for that purpose, and I object.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The amendment was offered before objection had been made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before the Chair had opportunity to present to the House the request of the gentleman from Nebraska for unanimous consent the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] obtained recognition, and asked to offer an amendment, which was read at the Clerk's desk, and is now before the House. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from North Carolina object till after the reading of the amendment.

Mr. BENNETT. This bill was called up once under the new hour rule, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], in whose judicious judgment I have the fullest confidence, objected to the bill, and cogently presented his views. If his statement was correct, this is not a righteous measure, and I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from North Carolina states that he rose to object before the amendment was offered by the gentleman from Indiana, the Chair will recognize the objection.

Mr. BENNETT. I rose to object when the name of the gentleman from Nebraska was announced, and I demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is bound to accept the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina, who now objects to the present consideration of this bill.

PEOPLE'S NATIONAL BANK OF LAWRENCEBURG, IND.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish at this late moment of the session to ask a favor of my fellow-members; and I request that they listen to the reading of a bill which I hold in my hand. When they have heard it, I know every gentleman here will see the justice of the measure and the propriety of its immediate passage. It concerns a bank; but the measure is no less meritorious on that account.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7706) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate certificate of deposit to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind.

Whereas the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind., deposited with the assistant treasurer of the United States at Cincinnati, Ohio, on the 26th day of September, 1883, the sum of $10,000 in United States legal-tender notes, and received therefor a certificate of deposit numbered E 35988, in accordance with section 5193 of the Revised Statutes (act of June 8, 1872), and the same was lost or destroyed by the overflow of the Ohio River which overwhelmed said town during the month of February, 1884, and said certificate never having been found, and payment on the same having been stopped March 13, 1884: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue and cause to be issued to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind., a duplicate to said certificate of deposit numbered E 35988, for the sum of $10,000, so issued by the assistant treasurer of the United States at Cincinnati, upon such evidence of loss, and upon execution of such bonds of indemnity to the United States, and under such regulations in regard to issue and payment as he shall prescribe.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not in order. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk concluded the reading.

Mr. WELLER. I repeat the question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. WELLER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman's appeal. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which has just been read. Is there objection?

Mr. WELLER. I object.

Mr. CASSIDY. I object unless the gentleman stipulates he will not object to my bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. All right.

Mr. CASSIDY. The gentleman first stipulates and then capitulates. [Laughter.]

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] states that he rises to a question of privilege. The Chair has recognized the gentleman, and hopes the House will allow him to be heard.

Mr. BAYNE. I only ask for a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me to have my question by unanimous consent first—

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to occupy the time of the House but for a moment. During the discussion to-day on the Post-Office appropriation bill—

Mr. ELLIS. The House is in such disorder that we can not hear either the gentleman from Pennsylvania or the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BAYNE. During the discussion of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Post-Office appropriation bill—

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I make the point of order that I am occupying the floor on a similar question.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky did claim the floor prior to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who rises to ask the attention of the House to a question of personal privilege. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky next.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, during the discussion of the report of the conference committee on the Post-Office appropriation bill I made some remarks on the provisions of the Senate amendment respecting foreign-mail service. I learned from various sources, from a number of gentlemen, that in the progress of that debate it was generally believed in what I said I by implication had reflected on members of this House. I desire to say, in anything I said I had no intention in the world to reflect on any member of this House. That thought was entirely out of my mind. I had no such purpose, no such feeling.

My association with the members of this Congress has been of a pleasing and agreeable character. I know of no single member of this body with whom I have not had pleasant relations. I believe this body is the most intelligent, the most capable, the most distinguished legislative body in the civilized world [applause], and I am indisposed by word or deed to say anything that would cast a reflection on any single individual member of this body, and if my remarks were so construed by anybody I failed to make myself understood or my remarks were misconstrued. [Applause.]

PEOPLE'S NATIONAL BANK, LAWRENCEBURG, IND.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that he had recognized the gentleman from Indiana, who called a bill up to which objection was made, but it is now said that objection has been withdrawn.

Mr. TUCKER. I have not withdrawn my objection, and I desire to say to my friend from Indiana that if his measure can be heard and others can be heard, I will not object. I have been pressing for the consideration of a little bill for the week past. I am perfectly willing the gentleman's bill shall be considered, but I am not willing it shall be considered while all others are to be ruled out.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is it in order to move to go to the Speaker's table for the purpose of taking up the Mexican pension bill? [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Kentucky on a question of privilege.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understand the gentleman yields to me to call up the Mexican pension bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I will for that purpose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House go to the business on the Speaker's table for the purpose of taking up the Mexican pension bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I withdraw my objection to the bill of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I only yielded to allow the Mexican pension bill to be called up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Indiana. The objection made to his bill has been withdrawn. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana for the present consideration of the bill which has already been read from the Clerk's desk?

Mr. CASSIDY. It is on condition he will not object to our bills.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe it is in order, and I trust my friend will not object to my moving to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. MILLS. No quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Who objects to it?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I am perfectly willing to proceed under the new hour rule.

Mr. MILLS. We will all consent to that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is my motion in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decided it is not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman from Alabama withdraws his objection.

Mr. MILLS. I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not object.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I would withdraw my objection if I did not believe the gentleman from Indiana would renew it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. CASSIDY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed under the order requiring ten objections until the further order of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a question of unanimous consent pending before the House now.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I object to further interruptions, and desire to proceed with my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the question before the House. The gentleman from Indiana asks consideration of a bill which has been read from the Clerk's desk. The demand of the gentleman from Alabama for the regular order has been withdrawn, and the Chair now asks, is there further objection to the present consideration of the bill presented by the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. This measure was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and was reported unanimously by that committee by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT]; it has been recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and I trust it will be found that the measure is not only a proper one but eminently just. I hope it will be adopted.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POST, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. POST, of Pennsylvania. I desire to ask whether it is in order for this House under the order for a call of the House to transact any business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Except by unanimous consent.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask consent to take up a Senate bill for present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota to ask consent.

Mr. STRAIT. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill No. 1543, for the relief of Wilbur F. Steel, be taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. How does this bill get before the House?

Mr. BENNETT. Is that to be read subject to objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. WELLER. I shall object to the consideration of that bill unless the gentleman be permitted to make a statement or explanation that will satisfy me as to its merits.

Mr. STRAIT. I apprehend that there will be no objection to the passage of the bill if I can have a very few moments for a brief explanation.

This gentleman purchased some years ago from a railroad company the portion of land referred to here; but it appeared when he was ordered by the railroad company to settle on the land and when a survey was made that it was not railroad land, but proved to be a school section of land.

Now this bill simply allows him to buy the lands while the territory is granted other lands in lieu of the lands thus taken up. It does not cost the Government anything. This has been recommended by the Commissioner of the Land Office, by the Secretary of the Interior, and has the indorsement of the Public Lands Committee of the House. This bill has also passed the Senate.

Mr. WELLER. I will ask the gentleman a question, whether this party was the original occupant of the land?

Mr. STRAIT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELLER. And has continued so ever since?

Mr. STRAIT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELLER. And made improvements on the land and cultivated it as his own?

Mr. STRAIT. Yes; he has improved these lands to the value of $25,000.

Mr. WELLER. Then I have no objection.

Mr. COOK. I have said that no bill should pass by unanimous consent from that side as long as it was engaged in this filibustering against the election cases.

Mr. STRAIT. Then I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. COOK. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CASSIDY. I desire to take up Senate bill 723, for the relief of Eugene B. Rail and others, and put it upon its passage. I believe there will be no objection to this bill if the House will hear it read.

Mr. NELSON. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. NELSON. I do. I want to raise the question of order, if the Chair will allow me.

Mr. CASSIDY. Do you object to the bill on its merits?

Mr. NELSON. Under the rule adopted some days ago, what is sometimes known as the "ten-men" rule, it is not competent for the Chair to entertain a motion for unanimous consent. I claim that it is not competent except within the period fixed by the rule itself, until after the reading of the Journal, and the only motion that the Chair can entertain now is the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. CASSIDY. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH, of Missouri). The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. BEACH. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the second call of the roll, or the call of members who did not respond on the first call.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Pending that I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that there is a motion pending to dispense with the call. As soon as the Clerk has called the names of those who were absent on the first roll-call the question will be taken on the motion to dispense with all further proceedings.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. My point of order is that when a motion was made for a call of the House by the gentleman from Pennsylvania it was then I rose to this question of personal privilege, and I was recognized by the Chair. I had proceeded with my remarks for some ten or fifteen minutes, when I yielded for appropriation bills, but I was to be recognized by the Chair as soon as the appropriation bills were disposed of. And I have yielded to gentlemen for unanimous consent. I do not wish to be dictatorial, or to take away from any gentleman his right of way to get unanimous consent. But since there is a determination not to yield for requests for unanimous consent by any one, I think I should now be allowed to proceed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky as correct, except that when the motion was made for a call of the House the gentleman from Kentucky did not assert his right to the floor. That matter is now pending, and as soon as it is disposed of the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. BAGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill S. 957.

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman for that purpose, the regular order being demanded. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll of absentees.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask the Chair if it is not manifestly unjust when a man rises and asks for unanimous consent on this floor and another member is not permitted to address the Chair on a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that a motion has been made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to dispense with all proceedings under the call. But the names of absentees have not been called, and until that has been done the question can not be taken on the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. But the gentleman from Texas can not take me off my feet to make a motion except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion was made, and the gentleman from Kentucky was not at that time seeking recognition from the Chair. There is no question about the gentleman's right. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded with the second call of the roll, when the following members failed to answer:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate agreed to the amendment of the House to the first amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the sixty-sixth amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8256) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. BACK to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

During the second call of the roll,

Mr. HISCOCK said: I ask that all proceedings be suspended except the consideration of conference reports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll-call is almost completed, and there is a motion to dispense with all further proceedings under the call, which will be put to the House when the call is completed.

The call of the roll having been completed, the question was taken on the motion to dispense with all further proceedings under the call, and it was agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CASSIDY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the objection offered a moment ago to the matter I desire to call up has been withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nevada is not in order. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE], who rises to a question of personal privilege.

Before the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] proceeds the Chair will lay before the House a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

JAIL AT FORT SMITH, ARK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting a report of the grand jury in regard to the jail at Fort Smith, Ark.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent leave to withdraw papers was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. HEPBURN, in the case of M. C. Ridenour, without leaving copies, there having been no adverse report.

To Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, in the case of House bill 6201 for the relief of Louisa J. Ray, there having been a favorable report.

To Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin, in the case of W. W. Wiggins for increase of pension, there being no adverse report.

To Mr. CONNOLLY, in the case of John C. Geyer, without leaving copies, there having been no adverse report.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. ELLIOTT, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print in the RECORD some remarks on the contested-election case of Massey vs. Wise.

Mr. HART asked unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some remarks upon the legal questions involved in the case of Pool vs. Skinner.

Mr. RANNEY and Mr. PETTIBONE. I ask for the same privilege.

Mr. COOK. I object.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I object. The objection also applies to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HART].

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. YOUNG. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. YOUNG. How much time has the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not desire to occupy any more time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky has eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. YOUNG. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky is kind enough to yield to me.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Not just now. I desire to call the attention of the House and of the country to the fact that I am warranted by the encouragements of these whisky rings to move the abolition of the whole internal-revenue system. When only 16,000,000 gallons were made in 1863 there were $16,000,000 of taxes.

Mr. YOUNG. I must insist if the gentleman from Kentucky declines to yield to others that he must confine himself to the point of order which he got the right from the House to discuss.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is not discussing the point of order, but is discussing the bill.

Mr. YOUNG. Exactly; he is not discussing the point of order. I make the point his remarks are too wide a departure from the leave which he received to state his question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky has now seven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. YOUNG. The Chair has not yet ruled on the question of order, and I ask him to rule whether the gentleman is in order in the discussion which he is now following.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the adoption of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8239) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to the floor on his question of personal privilege.

Mr. YOUNG. I insist that the Chair shall rule on my point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman frankly that the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee, in the opinion of the Chair, is well taken as to a part of the remarks, but that for a portion of the time the gentleman has confined himself to the statement of facts. The Chair hopes the gentleman for the remainder of his time will confine himself to the appeal.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for the purpose of submitting a privileged question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield for that purpose?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Certainly. Before yielding the floor, however, I ask permission of the House to extend my remarks and print some papers and extracts which I will not detain the House by reading.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly. [See Appendix.]

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I now call up the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the naval appropriation bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House 8239, making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 8, 12, 13, 15, 18, 19, 30, 32.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 7, 9, 11, 16, 21, 22, 23, 24, 27, 29, 31, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to continue the existence of the naval advisory board or to prevent the Secretary of the Navy from constituting such other advisory board as he may deem necessary to aid in determining the plans of structure of said cruisers."

And the Senate agree to the same.

WALDO HUTCHINS,

SAML. J. RANDALL,

JNO. D. LONG,

Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,

F. B. PLUMB,

J. B. BECK,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. It is proper, Mr. Speaker, to state to the House the substance of the agreement between the two Houses as reported by the conference committee. The final conclusion leaves the new vessel at the Brooklyn navy-yard without any appropriation to complete her. It leaves the 20 per cent. as the figure for the limit of repairs to wooden vessels of the Navy. It provides for the building of two cruisers, one heavy gunboat and one light gunboat, leaving the responsibility for their construction with the Secretary of the Navy without interference by the existing advisory board, but permitting the President to create an advisory board if he may see fit.

It provides for the armament to the amount of $500,000 for these vessels. It leaves the monitors unappropriated for. The Senate recedes from the purchase of what is known as the Ericsson Destroyer, which involved an appropriation of $212,000. The Senate recedes from that position.

Mr. COX, of New York. I was not able to understand what the committee had done with reference to the monitors.

Mr. RANDALL. We did nothing; no appropriation was made for them.

I now ask the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the conference report was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EUGENE B. BAIL AND OTHERS.

Mr. CASSIDY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who objected to the bill (S. 723) has withdrawn the objection, and I now ask consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Eugene B. Bail, James H. Hardy, John M. Gearhart, George W. Hopkins, Lloyd Frizell, and Archibald N. Smith, sureties upon the official bond of David L. Gregg, given as security for the faithful performance by said Gregg of his duties as receiver of public moneys at Carson City, Nev., and dated June 17, 1865, be, and the said sureties and their personal representatives are hereby, upon the payment to the United States of the sum of $1,000, released and discharged of and from all and every obligation and liability whatsoever on account of said bond, or any breach thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CASSIDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7938) granting a pension to Amanda Allen.

THANKS TO THE SPEAKER.

Mr. KEIFER. I rise to submit a privileged resolution.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I wish to offer a resolution.

Mr. KEIFER. My resolution relates to the Speaker of the House. I ask its present consideration, while the Speaker is out of the Hall, and I hope every person will give attention while it is being read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH, of Missouri). The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of this House are hereby tendered to Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE, the Speaker, for the courtesy with which he has treated all its members, and for the ability and fairness with which he has presided over the deliberations of the House during the Forty-eighth Congress.

[Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. I rise to ask that in taking this vote it be done by a rising vote, as a distinguished mark of respect to the gentleman whom it is intended to compliment.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I second the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair takes great pleasure in stating the question to the Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress. All who are in favor of the resolution just read will rise and stand until counted. [After a pause.] Three hundred and twenty-four Representatives have voted, and the resolution is unanimously agreed to. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

THANKS TO HON. J. C. S. BLACKBURN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND].

Mr. POLAND. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of this House are hereby tendered to the Hon. J. C. S. BLACKBURN, the Speaker pro tempore, for the ability and courtesy with which he presided over the deliberations of the House during the period he occupied the Speaker's chair.

The question being taken on the resolution, it was unanimously adopted.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I present a report from a committee of conference. The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8256) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 12, 49, 59, 130, 142, 195, and 198.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 47, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 61, 62, 63, 64, 124, 132, 140, 166, 173, 193, 194, 196, 197, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$100,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$5,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 131, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of said amendment the words "to be used for an advance course of instruction of naval officers;" and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,000." Strike out also, after the word "dollars," the following: "For pay of one clerk to officer in charge of building, $1,000; in all, $12,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 141, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$200,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

SAM. J. RANDALL,

W. H. FORNEY,

THOMAS RYAN,

Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,

EUGENE HALE,

JAMES B. BECK,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. For the purpose of saving time and with a view to the quick transmission of this report to the Senate I refrain from making any other remarks than to announce to the House that when this conference report has been adopted this House will have finally acted upon every appropriation bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAX SALES IN DISTRICT.

Mr. McCOMAS. I present a report by a committee of conference.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8256) entitled "An act relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment substituting for the words stricken out by the Senate the words "and the affidavits hereinafter required;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"Provided further, That where the commissioners are satisfied that any lot is the actual homestead of the owner and that it comprises the principal portion of his property, they may accept a sum in full payment of the same, not less than one-half of the assessed value of the lot."

And insert the following:

"Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect pending suits."

And the Senate agree to the same.

L. E. McCOMAS,

JOHN F. FOLLETT,

W. L. WILSON,

Managers on the part of the House.

N. W. ALDRICH,

J. J. INGALLS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. McCOMAS. I move the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. McCOMAS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAGINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up and put on its passage the Senate bill 2609, to provide permanent reservations for the Indians in Northern Montana, and for other purposes.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. MAGINNIS] asks consent to take from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage a bill the title of which he has indicated.

Mr. MAGINNIS. This bill has been recommended by the Committees on Indian Affairs of both Houses and by all who are familiar with the subject.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, this is read subject to objection, is it not?

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Before the reading of the bill was concluded several members called for the regular order.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report, which I will send to the Clerk's desk. It is a report of those claims referred by the Committee on Claims to the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883. The Speaker entertained it and ordered it entered upon the Journal at the close of the last Congress, and I present it here now.

The SPEAKER. That was done by unanimous consent. There is no rule at all upon the subject.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (No. 2530) known as the bill for the retirement of General Grant. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BENNETT and other members. Regular order.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled repeatedly during the last two or three days that a motion to suspend the rules is not in order if objected to while other motions are pending before the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think that if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will allow me to attach an amendment to that bill pensioning every Mexican soldier he may get it passed. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON] rises to submit a privileged report.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, has the Chair decided that unanimous consent is required to entertain a motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up and passing the bill that I have indicated?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided that under the rules of the House a motion to suspend the rules is simply a motion which, like any other parliamentary motion, is in order only when there is not another matter pending before the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the Chair please indicate what subject is now pending before the House which interferes with the opportunity I desire to have to move to suspend the rules for the purposes I have stated? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the report of the Committee on Elections in a contested-election case is pending.

Mr. RANDALL. I appeal to my friend from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] to take that obstruction out of the way. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. RANDALL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and to lay on the table the report of the Committee on Elections. [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that motion to suspend the rules, if objected to, is any more privileged than other motions to suspend the rules.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. There are several other motions pending before the House, motions to take a recess and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Yes; there are motions for a recess upon which the House has been trying to vote for nearly two days. The Chair has consistently ruled that a motion to suspend the rules is not in order while another motion is pending.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

IOWA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. WILLIS. If the House should take a vote on this contested-election case, then would not the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be in order?

The SPEAKER. If the contested-election case were out of the way, the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania would be in order.

Mr. BENNETT. If this House will now consider the contested-election case of Frederick vs. Wilson, all objection to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will be withdrawn. [Applause on the Republican side, and noisy demonstrations throughout the Hall.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain no motion and will recognize no gentleman until the House is in order. The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that gentlemen take their seats and order is restored.

The deputy sergeant-at-arms proceeded through the Hall bearing the mace. While he was attempting to restore order Mr. BENNETT addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen on the floor must be aware of the fact that it is utterly impossible to transact business unless we can have order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (standing on a chair). Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I want it distinctly understood (because I keep faith with men and women) [laughter] that the objection to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be withdrawn if we can have this election case considered. I do not say more. I do not keep the individual consciences of members. God Almighty has made the human mind free, and gentlemen can vote as they please.

Mr. RANDALL. I appeal to the gentleman from North Carolina to take a vote on the election case at once, so that I may have an opportunity to call up this other bill.

Mr. BENNETT. I demand the previous question on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case of Frederick vs. Wilson.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, rose and held up his hand as if seeking recognition from the Speaker.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] desires to make a statement. I trust the Chair will recognize him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] desires to make a statement, and is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, if this House will vote to put General Grant on the retired-list, I am willing to be sacrificed after that. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BENNETT. I demand the previous question upon the resolutions reported by the Committee on Elections in the case of Frederick vs. Wilson.

The SPEAKER. But there are motions pending to take a recess, and amendments to such motions.

Mr. BENNETT. They are withdrawn by the gentlemen over the way.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I will state to the House that if they will permit a vote on the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania we will withdraw all objection and take a vote immediately upon the proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Well, then, in order that there may be no excuse, I withdraw my motion in order to permit a vote on the proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina, and I ask this House to act with fairness upon both votes.

Mr. BENNETT. I demand the previous question on the resolutions reported by the Committee on Elections in the case of Frederick vs. Wilson. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. There can be no vote unless gentlemen will preserve order. [Renewed cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] The Chair will not entertain any motion or recognize any gentleman until order is restored. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from North Carolina demands the previous question upon the adoption of the resolutions reported by the Committee on Elections in the contested-election case of Frederick vs. Wilson.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move to take a recess until fifteen minutes before 12 o'clock. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. I submit the point that a motion for a recess is not in order pending the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Under what rule does the gentleman make that point of order?

Mr. BARKSDALE. I withdraw the motion for a recess.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is on ordering the previous question upon the resolutions reported by the Committee on Elections. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the adoption of the resolutions, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That James Wilson was not elected as a Representative in Congress from the fifth district of Iowa, and is not entitled to a seat on the floor of this House.

Resolved, That Benjamin T. Frederick was duly elected as a Representative in Congress from the fifth district of Iowa, and is entitled to be sworn in as a member of this House.

The question being taken, the resolutions were adopted. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BENNETT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN T. FREDERICK presented himself at the bar of the House and was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

RETIREMENT OF GENERAL GRANT.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move to suspend the rules to take from the Speaker's table and pass Senate bill 2530.

The bill is as follows:

A bill (S. 2530) to authorize an additional appointment on the retired-list of the Army.

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint on the retired-list of the Army of the United States, from among those who have been generals commanding the armies of the United States, or generals-in-chief of said Army, one person with the rank and full pay of such general or general-in-chief as the case may be, and the total number now allowed by law to compose said retired-list shall be, on such appointment, increased accordingly.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules. [Derisive cries on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] demands a second. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. McMILLIN, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. MILLER. The tellers will take their places.

The House proceeded to divide; but before the result of the count by tellers was announced,

Mr. McMILLIN said: We agree to consider a second as ordered.

The SPEAKER. There are now thirty minutes allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the proposition and fifteen against it.

Mr. RANDALL. I waive my right to debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to occupy any time in support of the motion; and unless some gentleman takes the floor in opposition— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Gentlemen by these interruptions are simply delaying the consideration of the very measures they desire to advance.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, in demanding a second I had no purpose to defeat action on this bill. As the Speaker and many other gentlemen will bear witness, I sought an opportunity to make a bare statement before it came to the point of demanding a second. Failing in that, my only remedy was to demand a second. I shall not occupy all the time assigned me. I simply ask the attention of the House now to state that my opposition to General Grant's retirement heretofore and now has not arisen from any want of appreciation of his distinguished services, nor from any want of sympathy with his present physical condition. But through six years of service here, as all gentlemen who remember anything of my action will bear witness, I have in the case not only of Grant but of every other man I believe save one (who had been expelled from the Army)—certainly in the case of every one who voluntarily left the Army—I have entered my protest against putting him back in the military service for the purpose of retiring him on high pay.

It is a bad policy to adopt. It is one that can result in no good to the discipline of the Army—an Army which last year, I think the Secretary of War reports, had 30 per cent. of deserters. I do not speak of officers. But I oppose it because I think sound public policy demands that when a man of this Army for political honors leaves it and wears himself out in the political arena the Government is not under any obligation to give him a compensation of fifteen or twenty thousand dollars a year when he can not and does not render any service therefor.

Thus much, Mr. Speaker, I thought it proper to say. I have no feeling, as I have already said, against General Grant, but I think sound public policy dictates a different course from that which is proposed here to-day.

I now yield whatever time I have left to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the adoption of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8256) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

RETIREMENT OF GENERAL GRANT.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, it has not been demonstrated to this House that General Grant is in actual need of this relief. There is no proof of that fact, while there are tens of thousands of men who served their country who are at this very hour in distress and in sore need of relief, and the pension of this Congress had better be given to them than to one who already has a sufficient income. When they have been relieved it will be time enough to relieve General Grant and others who are not in distress.

And, sir, for that reason I shall object to the passage of this bill. I have voted against retiring General Pleasanton, who it was alleged was forced out of the Army, and I have also voted against the retirement of General Averill, who was similarly required to leave the Army—he certainly did not leave it voluntarily. I could not, therefore, vote to retire General Grant after having made that record against these very gallant and meritorious officers.

Mr. GOFF. Is not this an exceptional case?

Mr. MATSON. The other is an exceptional case.

Mr. GOFF. And these cases are not alike.

Mr. MATSON. Will you pension one man and refuse to pension the others?

Mr. COX, of New York. I would pension him.

Mr. MATSON. Can you give it to him and refuse it to the others? [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 42, nays 133.

So (one-fifth having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 198, nays 79, not voting 46; as follows:

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER (at ten minutes before 12 o'clock noon). Gentlemen of the House of Representatives: The work of the Forty-eighth Congress is now completed, and the time has come for the performance of my last official act as the presiding officer of this House. I should do violence to my own feelings and be guilty of the grossest ingratitude if I should declare a final adjournment without returning to you, individually and collectively, my sincere thanks for the complimentary resolution passed this morning. I thank you also, gentlemen, with equal warmth and sincerity, not only for the confidence reposed in me at the beginning of our labors here, but for the respect and courtesy which have characterized all your personal and official intercourse with me since that time.

The membership of this House is so large, its business is so great, and the struggle on the floor for priority in the consideration of measures is so earnest that without your cordial co-operation and support it would have been utterly impossible to conduct our proceedings in an orderly or regular manner. It is but simple justice to say that your support and co-operation have been promptly and cheerfully given in every emergency, and to that fact, more than to anything else, must be attributed whatever measure of success has attended my efforts to preserve order and facilitate the transaction of the public business. Very few, even among those who are best acquainted with our legislative history, have an adequate conception of the increased labors and responsibilities devolved upon Congress by the events of the last quarter of a century, and none, I am sure, who have not had actual experience can fully appreciate the difficulties attending the transaction of business in a body so large as this.

In the first Congress the House of Representatives consisted of only sixty-seven members—less than the present membership of the Senate. Now there are three hundred and twenty-five, besides the Delegates from the Territories. From the organization of the Government to the close of the Twenty-fifth Congress, a period of fifty years, there were introduced into the House, as shown by its records, 8,777 bills and joint resolutions; while during the two sessions of the present Congress, 8,630 bills and joint resolutions have been introduced—almost as many as during that half century. At present each one of our principal general appropriation bills embraces as much money as the whole amount of the net ordinary expenditures of the Government during the first nine or ten years of its existence, and the specific objects to be investigated and provided for in those bills have so increased in number that it has become a very considerable task even to enumerate them.

Although this House has passed a larger number of bills than any of its predecessors, except, perhaps, one or two which sat for a longer time, it is not at all strange, gentlemen, in view of the facts just mentioned, that it should be compelled to leave unfinished a very large percentage of the measures presented. It is evident that unless some constitutional or legislative provision can be adopted which will relieve Congress from the consideration of all, or at least a large part, of the local and private measures which now occupy the time of the committees and fill the Calendars of the two Houses, the percentage of business left undisposed of at each adjournment must continue to increase from year to year. It is not reasonable to suppose that an alteration of the Constitution can be effected, but it is worthy of serious consideration whether a general law might not be enacted which would authorize the several Executive Departments and the courts of justice to hear and determine these matters under such rules and regulations as would amply protect the interests of the Government and at the same time secure to the citizen a more expeditious and appropriate remedy than is now afforded. If this shall be done time and opportunity will be afforded here for the deliberate consideration of those great public questions which the Constitution has committed to the legislative department, and something might be done to promote the welfare of the whole people without neglecting the special interests of any.

I congratulate you, gentlemen, upon the spirit of harmony and good feeling which has prevailed throughout your deliberations. It is true that wide differences of opinion have been developed and the largest liberty of debate has been exercised, but each member has honestly endeavored to respect and to protect the rights and privileges of his associates, and I am sure that no personal animosities have been engendered that will survive the close of your official relations. We shall part to-day better friends than when we met, and hereafter, I trust, we will all recall with pleasure the fact that we were associated as members of the House in the Forty-eighth Congress.

For my part I shall always consider myself indebted to you for the highest honor of my life, the honor of presiding over the deliberations of the American House of Representatives—a legislative body which, while it has always respected the just authority of the Government, has never failed to assert the rights of the people. When it ceases to do either it will no longer be an honor to preside over it.

Gentlemen, renewing my profound thanks for your assistance, for your forbearance, and for the expressions of esteem and confidence which you have just placed upon your record, and assuring each one of you of my best wishes for his success in every honorable aspiration, I now declare this House adjourned sine die.

[Loud and prolonged applause in all parts of the Hall and in the galleries.]
